FANCY DRESS BALL.

The following works of reference on Fancy Costumes may be inspected at Messrs. FARMER'S Establishment, and Dresses fabricated therefrom with the utmost correctness, and at the lowest cash prices:—

HOPE'S COSTUMES OF THE ANCIENTS, illustrating Egyptian, Assyrian, and Greek Dresses, for both sexes.

PLANCHE'S CYCLOPÆDIA OF COSTUME.—About the most reliable work published.

MODES ET COSTUMES HISTORIQUES, dessinés et gravés par Pauquet Frères d'apres les meilleurs maitres de chaque epoque et les documents les plus authentiques.

LACY'S DRAMATIC COSTUMES for male and female characters.

Some of the Egyptian and Greek Dresses in HOPE'S COSTUMES are most classical, entirely new to Sydney, and afford a pleasing and striking divergence from the motley array of dresses usually met with at fancy dress entertainments.

LITTLE BOYS' SUITS.—For youngsters just breeched, in serge, 7s 9d, 9s 9d; in velvet, 10s 9d, 11s 9d. All wholesale prices. FARMER'S.

FRENCH SILKS.—Black Satin de Lyon, 3s 9d; Black Brocaded Satin, 3s 6d; Black Gros-grain, 2s 11d; and other prices. Duchesse Satin de Lyon, in all new Shades, with Rich Brocades and Plushes to match. FARMER'S.

LADIES' 10s 6d to 35s ULSTERS.

CHILDREN'S 3s 6d to 15s ULSTERS.

LADIES' CAMBRIC HANDKERCHIEFS.—Plain, 4s 6d to 10s 6d per dozen; Hem-stitch, 10s 6d to 21s. All wholesale prices. FARMER'S.

LADIES' SILK UMBRELLAS, 5s 9d, 7s 6d, 8s 11d, 10s 6d, all wholesale prices. A single umbrella may be purchased. FARMER'S.

LADIES' FANCY SILK TIES, 1s, 1s 3d, 1s 6d, 2s. The wholesale price per dozen to the trade is 12s, 15s, 18s, 24s, but a single Tie may be purchased in our establishment at the prices we quote. FARMER and COMPANY.

FRENCH RIBBONS.—Entirely New Shades, all at wholesale prices, 5d to 10d per yard. For prompt cash only. FARMER'S.

FOREIGN RIBBONS.—A Manufacturer's Stock at 2s 6d, 2s 11d, 3s 6d, 4s 6d, and 5s 6d per piece of 12 yards. All wholesale prices, for prompt cash only. FARMER'S.

LADIES' KID GLOVES.—FARMER'S celebrated Half-crown quality, fresh shipment, all colours, all sizes. Also, the Normandie, 4-button, 3s 11d; 6-button, 4s 11d; 8-button, 5s 11d. Wholesale prices for cash only. FARMER'S.

FRENCH MILLINERY.—Ladies' Velvet and Plush Hats, 12s 6d to 25s; Velvet and Plush Bonnets, 21s to 42s; Children's Trimmed Hats, 10s 6d to 18s 6d; Seal Toques, 6s to 18s 6d. Wholesale prices for prompt cash. FARMER'S.

FRENCH MERINOES.—A magnificent assortment just to hand, and perhaps the best value we have ever offered. We sell for prompt cash only, at wholesale prices, i.e., you can purchase in our warehouse a single yard, or more, or less, at the same price as most retail drapers have to pay per piece. This is an advantage offered by no other house in Sydney, and it applies, be it remembered, to every department in our establishment. FARMER and COMPANY.

AUTUMN DRESSES—DIAGONALS.—Choice colourings, wear-resisting textures, that will not shrink or cockle. These are the characteristics of the very large parcel of Diagonals to which we now invite attention. The price is 7½d per yard, the lowest in Autumn dress materials we have opened as yet. Customers can depend on our lowest prices. The qualities are always studied. We never place a yard of dress stuff before the public for the quality of which we cannot vouch; and these Diagonals are, we think, the best we have ever offered at the price. FARMER and COMPANY.

AUTUMN DRESSES.—BEIGES.—Depend upon it Beiges will be the fabrics, par excellence, for the coming season. With few exceptions, there are no materials that wear at all equal to them, certainly none at so low a price. Then they are mostly neat plain colours—colours, too, that after a season's wear don't look shabby. You may get well wet in a Beige dress, but it will not look any the worse for it; indeed, excepting the double-width Sattaras we are showing at 2s 11d, we know nothing to be compared with our Beiges at 10½d to 16½d a yard. Patterns are now ready for customers in the country, and it will save much time and trouble if our rule relating to country orders be borne in mind, viz., "That remittances must accompany country orders." OUR QUOTATIONS ARE FOR PROMPT CASH ONLY. WE DECLINE TO DO BUSINESS IN ANY OTHER WAY.
FARMER and COMPANY.

AUTUMN DRESSES—SATTARAS.—We direct attention to these really excellent dress materials with very great pleasure. Seldom, indeed, can we place before our patrons, at the price quoted, anything at all equal to the parcel now announced. From an eminent Lyons manufacturer, finished to the order of a New York firm, but made in larger quantity than required, the balance was offered to our Mr. William Farmer at a price that barely paid the cost of making. We quote these magnificent goods at 2s 11d for the double width. The wholesale price in Paris is 4½ francs—3s 7d, and they have never yet been sold under 5s per yard in Sydney. Splendid colourings, never-ending wear. Price, 2s 11d for the double width, equivalent to 1s 5½d for single. Patterns free. FARMER and COMPANY.

WHITE SHIRTS.—We have a Clothing Factory in London, because skilled labour of the class we want is there at its best. We are certain that, over and above all other savings, some 15 per cent. is saved to our customers by this factory. We would have a shirt factory there as well, if the largest manufacturing shirt company in England had not come to our terms. We have made arrangements with this company that suit us on the whole as well as having a factory at present; and this arrangement has reference to certain standard makes of linen and calico that must be used in our shirts, and also to price. We commence our White Shirts for gentlemen at One Guinea the half-dozen. We don't quote lower than this, as we could not sell an article that it would be honest to recommend at a lower price. Then, our next price is 24s the half-dozen; then 27s; then 28s 6d, 30s, 33s, 36s, and 39s. We have some extra fine goods at 45s the half-dozen, quite equal to those we sold at 60s under our old credit system. But now we sell for prompt cash only; and where formerly we sold a single shirt, now sell six or more. FARMER and COMPANY.

TELEION. TELEION.

TELEION. TELEION.

TELEION; TELEION.

TELEION. TELEION.

TELEION. TELEION.

TELEION.—Is it so? Is there anything perfect in this imperfect sphere? Well, Captain Jacques thinks his Collars are, and so has patented them under the above designation. "The 'Teleion' Collar effectually keeps ANY cravat in proper position without the necessity and bother of pinning it." So says Captain Jacques, and says correctly in this instance. The "Teleion" Collar is patented in Europe and America, and confined to FARMER and COMPANY in New South Wales. Price, 10s 6d per dozen, prompt net cash. All other gentlemen's Collars in the very best quality manufactured, 9s per dozen, or 9d each. FARMER'S.

TWEED TROUSERS.—One thousand Pairs opening up this week at 7s 6d per pair. Everybody should know the value we give in our ready-made Clothing. For these seven-and-sixpenny Trousers, in other shops, you may pay any price from 11s 6d to 13s 6d, and you have to pay in like manner for every other item in gentlemen's clothing. You can save largely by buying at wholesale prices for prompt cash at FARMER'S.

BOYS' CLOTHING.—Suits at 7s 6d and upwards. Boys' Clothing is our constant study. We keep the largest stock in the city, and we believe if Sydney were polled to-morrow by a large and overwhelming majority we should be voted the best Boys' Clothing Store. We hope to open this week some 5000 suits of Boys' Winter Clothing, all made in our London Factory. The closest economy has been exercised in making these suits. Considerable ingenuity is displayed in trimming and braiding the smaller suits, as the samples to hand show, while in the suits for bigger boys, good, strong, wear-resisting fabrics have been used. Now, as to price. The great factor in our new system is READY MONEY. Ready money keeps our London factory going. Ready-money payments enable us to sell our Boys' Clothing at wholesale prices. So that when we announce that the prices in the parcel now to hand are the lowest for prompt cash, it is all that is necessary. FARMER'S.

ULSTERS AND OVERCOATS.—Upwards of three thousand to open this week for gentlemen—prices will be lower than we have ever offered. Kindly call and ask to be shown through the stock. Each garment will be marked in plain figures at wholesale prices, but we will not sell to the trade.
FARMER and COMPANY.

RAILWAY RUGS, at wholesale prices, commencing at 4s 9d and advancing to 55s. All grades—the Oxford, the Pellissa, the Austrian, the Sealskin. Fully 3000 rugs to select from. No trade parcels. Our system affords the opportunity to private purchasers to make their selections in any quantity that may be required at wholesale prices for prompt cash. FARMER'S.

HAMMOCKS.—American Hammocks, made by the American Indians, roomy, strong, will stand the roughest usage, and last a decade or longer. German Hammocks, plain and parti-coloured, can be rigged almost anywhere. Hammocks for little girls, big girls, little boys, big boys, adults, all sorts and sizes; prices for prompt cash, 7s 6d, 8s 6d, 9s 6d, 10s 6d, 12s 6d, 15s, 16s 6d. The largest and best assortment anywhere. Five hundred to select from. Much money can be saved by buying even a single Hammock at FARMER'S.

TWEEDS BY THE YARD.—We sell more tweeds by the yard (that is really good tweeds) than any half-dozen other houses in Sydney. And we do this because we sell far and away cheaper than any other house. The best plain Colonial tweeds, strong and weighty, 2s 6d; extra heavy ditto, 3s 9d; splendid Bannockburn tweeds, pure unweighted wool, 2s, 2s 6d, 3s 6d, 3s 9d; Killiecrankie and Blair Athol tweeds, [illegible]; West of England tweeds, [illegible] FARMER'S.

POLICE.

CENTRAL POLICE COURT.

The Bench on Saturday was composed, in one court, of the Police Magistrate, with Messrs. Arguimbau and Deane; and in the second Court Mr. Fowler was the sitting magistrate.

Charles Ranger was found guilty of having, in Kent-street, at 2 o'clock in the morning, wilfully offended against public decency, and was sentenced to be imprisoned seven days. A woman named Howard, implicated with Ranger in the offence, was charged, under another form, as a common prostitute, wandering and behaving in an indecent manner, and was remanded for better proof as to her character.

George Ward was charged with stealing from the person. Constable Dyson apprehended the prisoner on information received, and on searching him found a pocket-knife, a pipe-case, a piece of tobacco, and 7s. 4d. in money, all which he produced in Court. John Frazer, labourer, identified the knife and the pipe-case produced as his property; the tobacco is like a piece stolen from him, with about 5s. in money; he cannot identify any of the money produced; he was at the Liverpool Arms public-house yesterday afternoon, somewhat the worse for liquor, and treated the prisoner to a pint of beer; he fell asleep on the table, and on awaking missed his money, and the articles mentioned before. William Jackson was at the Liverpool Arms public-house, and saw prisoner take a pipe-case from Frazer's pocket, and put it into his own, but thinking that they were mates, he said nothing until Frazer awoke and complained of having been robbed, at which time prisoner was in the act of leaving the house; witness then reported what he had seen; prosecutor and prisoner were both under the influence of liquor; witness was quite sober; Prisoner, in reply to the charge, said that he was very drunk yesterday, and now had no recollection of the circumstances spoken of by the witnesses. Committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions.

Joseph Frainy was committed to take his trial at the Quarter Sessions, on a charge of feloniously wounding one Henry Shetlander. It appeared that prosecutor and prisoner and other two prisoners were playing cards at prisoner's house, on Friday evening, when a dispute arose about the turn to deal, in the course of which prosecutor called the prisoner a liar; prisoner said that he would teach him to call him a liar, and rose from his seat; a struggle took place but it did not appear that a blow was struck by either; prisoner had hold of prosecutor round the arms and body, and when loosed prosecutor complained of his ear having been bitten—as indeed it was, a portion having been bitten off; the separated piece was afterwards found upon the floor.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

The City Coroner (Mr. H. Shell, J.P.) held an inquest on Saturday morning, at the Observer Tavern, touching the death of Francis William Dawson, who was killed on the railway on Friday evening. The following evidence was adduced:—Mary Dawson stated that she resides at No. 4, Botany Road, Redfern; the dead body reviewed by the coroner and jury was that of her husband; he was fifty years of age, and a native of Dublin, Ireland; he was employed as a reader at the Herald Office, and had been in the colonies about twenty-six years; he had left a family of four daughters, all of whom are married; witness last saw him alive at half-past 5 on Friday evening, when he left home to go to his business; witness did not know what road he was in the habit of taking to enable him to reach the tram-cars at the railway station, but she knew he used to take a short cut, and had several times cautioned him against it, as he had told her he was in the habit of crossing the rails, and had been nearly run over twice in doing so; he was perfectly sober when he left home. Charles Furband stated that he was head shunter employed at the Redfern railway station; on Friday evening, about 5.40, witness was pulling about thirty-one trucks on to the main line to shunt one off; Bates, a shunter, cut one truck off when they were on the main line; witness was standing on the side of the road about ten yards from the line of trucks, giving directions to the driver; when the truck was cut off the train was stationary; the truck that was cut off backed on to the line about a foot or two from the train; witness then gave the signal to the driver to back the train, and, as he did so, looked round and saw a man between the buffers of the trucks that were attached to the engine and the one that had been detached; the train was in motion then, backing; upon seeing the man in that position, witness called out to him, and he stepped on one side, but as he did so the trucks came together, and carried him along for about four yards; the train stopped at witness' signal, and the man then fell lengthway on the line on his face, and three loaded trucks passed over him; the man, not being in the employment of the Railway Department, had no business in that part of the line; the occurrence took place at about 40 or 50 yards from the mouth of the tunnel; witness saw nothing of the man until he saw him between the trucks; it was not possible for the driver and fireman to see him from where they were; upon the train coming to a stand witness went up to him, and found that he was dead, the body being crushed along one side; he must have entered the yard by the steps close to the signal-box; these steps were supposed to be used by the workmen only; the body viewed by the coroner and jury was the same. By the jury: There is a gate to the steps, and a notice warning people not to trespass on the line. Thomas Bates, a shunter, gave corroborative evidence. Dr. Wilfred Hodgson deposed that at about a quarter to 6 o'clock on Friday evening he was called to see a man then lying on the railway line, near the tunnel, at Redfern; when first viewed by witness life was extinct and the body still warm; he was bleeding slightly from a large wound in the abdomen and hip on the left side; he made further examination of the body to-day (Saturday) and described the injuries; he had no doubt they were the cause of death. The jury returned a verdict of "Death from injuries accidentally received."

VICTORIAN POLICE COMMISSION.

(From the Argus.)

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 30.

Present—Messrs. Longmore (chairman), Anderson, Hall, Gibb, and Fincham, Ms.L.A., and Mr. Dixon.

Mr. O'Connor further deposed: In my opinion Mr. Hare's energy was misdirected. Mr. Sadleir, on several occasions, remonstrated with Mr. Hare and tried to show him the folly of going out, as he did, on no information. Captain Standish often spoke of Mr. Nicolson in the most disparaging terms. Once, after Captain Standish had been running Mr. Nicolson down, Mr. Hare said, "You should not say that; Mr. Nicolson is and always was a true and loyal friend to you." Captain Standish, on one occasion, referred to the death of Mr. John Thomas Smith, and said, "Now Nicolson's billet as assistant-commissioner will be done away with, as Mr. J. T. Smith got it for him. The billet is all a farce, and it will be all up with him now, as he has not another friend left." Captain Standish never went out with a party of police while I was with him at Benalla. He went to Melbourne several times, but never stayed long, telling me he was always hunted out of Melbourne by Sir Bryan O'Loghlen, acting Chief Secretary. After Mr. Hare came back from his last bush trip, about the end of June, he was downhearted and sick, and expressed himself as thoroughly beaten, and as not caring about staying longer, as he didn't expect to capture the outlaws. Captain Standish was most reticent, and would never tell Mr. Sadleir or myself anything until he had first told Mr. Hare, and then only some days afterwards. When Mr. Nicolson resumed charge of the district, he commenced work in a totally different manner from his predecessors. He put himself into communication with persons likely to know the gang's movements, and got some of them to act as spies. He was not reticent with Mr. Sadleir or myself. On 15th August, 1879, Captain Standish communicated to Mr. Nicolson the sticking-up of the Lancefield bank, telling him to start my party of trackers. We arrived on the same day at Kilmore. We picked up the robbers' tracks, and followed them 13 miles, to Pyalong. Here heavy rain obliterated the tracks, already faint from previous rain. But we ascertained the direction the robbers had taken, and through that the robbers were ultimately captured. In September, 1879, Mr. Sadleir, then at Wangaratta, informed us by telegram that —— had told him he had seen five armed men answering the description of the outlaws. Mr. Sadleir recommended our party to be got ready. Mr. Nicolson told Mr. Sadleir to bring the informant down. The man was afraid to be seen with the police, and so Mr. Sadleir did not bring him. Mr. Sadleir said he thought he could find the place where the men had been seen. I recommended, as the tracks would probably be obliterated by other traffic, that we should not go unless the informer showed us them. Mr. Nicolson, knowing the character of the informer, and on my advice, decided not to go. Once we got information the outlaws were seen near Wangaratta, and that the telegraph line was broken. On arriving at Wangaratta, for which place we forthwith started, we ascertained the whole thing was a mistake. A threshing-machine had pulled down the wire. For some time after that information ceased to come in. The Kellys got frightened that if they stirred we should be after them at once. We decided then not to go out except on reliable information. After a time Mr. Nicolson got information and told me to be ready any moment, as he knew the Kellys were within a certain radius, and he was waiting for exact information. Did not doubt that if he had remained the Kellys would have been taken. Everything was pointing to that result. Information was continually coming in. About a week before he was removed an informer saw Joe Byrne and spoke to him. Twelve hours after we heard of it, but there were in the interval a few hours of heavy rain. We went to Beechworth, where we saw Aaron Sherritt, who begged us not to go out. He had followed Byrne's tracks to where they were lost on the main road. He also said if we did not get the outlaws they would know who had given the information, and would murder certain persons. Mr. Nicolson was very anxious to go out, as he considered it would probably be his last chance; but he asked the opinion of Mr. Sadleir, myself, senior-constable Mullane, and detective Ward. We all considered it would not be justifiable to risk the lives of the informers under the circumstances; as nearly all our agents were in this portion of the district, we hoped for another chance. On 21st May, 1880, an agent sent in word that he had seen Joe Byrne up a gully near Mrs. Byrne's house. We started at once, and reached the exact spot. Got a man's track, but found it was that of a person collecting cows. Aaron Sherritt, who had met us near Everton, and acted as guide, saw it was Joe Byrne's brother. Returned to Benalla, and Mr. Nicolson was superseded by Mr. Hare next day, June 2, 1880. Captain Standish was constantly issuing orders and counter orders to Mr. Nicolson. Sometimes he would order a reduction of the men employed, and at others he would order that men should not be employed at certain places. I often wondered that Mr. Nicolson did not pitch the whole thing up. But he told me his private feelings were sunk, and that, for the public good, he stuck to the district. In my published report I say that Captain Standish "made a series of communications to the Queensland Government tending to depreciate me, and to remove the men from my control and supervision. This was done without my knowledge, and consequently I had no opportunity of explanation to my commissioner." He asked the Queensland Government that my men should remain without me, and did so without letting me know of his application. The application was refused, as were also others to the same effect. At last the Queensland Government allowed him to take over one man that I had enlisted in Victoria. Reported the matter to the Queensland Government complaining of the discourtesy, and requesting recall. Was recalled accordingly. Then I left Benalla. Mr. Hare superseded Mr. Nicolson on June 2, 1880. Mr. Nicolson, in the presence of Mr. Sadleir and myself, handed over the documents and papers to Mr. Hare. We talked together some time. Mr. Nicolson gave Mr. Hare information, and they and I had lunch together. From June 3rd to June 25, Mr. Hare worked in the same way as Mr. Nicolson had been doing before removal. Mr. Hare told me he didn't know what to do, and that although he had carte blanche as to money he could get no information. Left Benalla for Essendon with my troopers on June 25, 1880. Stopped at Flemington. Made arrangements to ship in a Queensland steamer leaving on June 29. On Sunday, June 27, at half-past 7 p.m., received a note from Captain Standish stating that the outlaws had shot Aaron Sherritt dead, and requesting me to return to Beechworth with my trackers. Lost no time in responding. Forthwith saw Captain Standish, who asked me whether, in the urgent state of the case, I could accede to his request. I replied I had ever wanted an opportunity to get the outlaws. Was not half-hearted, as Captain Standish alleges. Asked him to request Mr. Ramsay to see my Government held me blameless for disobeying the order of recall. Told him I would be ready at 10 p.m. that night. Our arms and uniform were packed up. There was no ruse on my part to make the Kellys believe I was going back to Queensland. Told Captain Standish my wife would accompany me to Beechworth, as the tracking might last some days. Asked him accordingly to get a first-class carriage attached. He said there would be one. We arrived at Benalla at 1 a.m., where we met Mr. Hare with several men. Mr. Hare rode in the same carriage as myself, my wife, and my wife's sister. There was a first-class carriage. We all conversed together, and were on the best terms. Mr. Hare asked me when I got information from Captain Standish. Replied, half-past 7. He said, "I never saw such a fellow; he does not care one rush about his work. I begged him to see you personally, as I knew it was condescension on your part to come back after the way he treated you." We went on towards Glenrowan, and were stopped before we got there by the pilot engine. Mr. Hare got out and met a porter carrying a lamp. The newspapers have reported the proceedings there. We were told the line had been taken up. Mr. Hare said, "The only thing we can do is to draw up to the platform at Glenrowan, so as to enable us to get our horses out." That was done. Mr. Hare and I were discussing the desirableness of riding to the place where the line was broken, and had decided to do so when constable Bracken rushed up on to the platform in a most excited state. Without addressing any one in particular, he said, "The Kellys are in Jones's public-house; for God's sake, take care, or they will escape." Mr. Hare said to me, "Come on, O'Connor, or they will escape." We started, Mr. Hare slightly leading. He asked me if the men were coming; turned round and sang out, "Come on, boys, come on." Saw following me a line of men. It was sufficiently light to see some were blacks and some whites. The party approached Mrs. Jones's. When about 25 yards from the house we were stopped by a single shot, which was immediately followed by a volley from the house. This our party replied to. At the first rush to the house there were six or seven of us. Constable Bracken did not tell us any other persons were in the hotel. Before I could load my rifle, a breechloading Snider, Mr. Hare sang out to me, "O'Connor, I am wounded—shot in the arm; I must go back." This he did. I give him ample margin when I say he was five minutes in the field. In his report, dated July 2, 1880, he says:—

"I was struck by the first shot, and my left arm dropped helpless beside me. The firing was continued on both sides with great determination for about five minutes, when it ceased from the verandah; and screams from men, women, and children came from the inside of the house. I at once called on my men to cease firing, which they did."

I deny that statement. Mr. Hare went back, leaving the front. It was I who gave the order for the men to take cover. It was I who, on hearing the cries of the women, gave orders to cease firing. It was I who called on the women to come out. Did not hear Mr. Hare speak after he left the front. I sang out, "Let the women out." The women immediately afterwards passed out. Challenged the people passing out to see none of them were the outlaws. Mr. Hare also states he loaded and fired his gun several times after being wounded. This I most emphatically deny, and will, in due time, bring one, if not more, witnesses to prove what I say. After Mr. Hare left, 10 minutes or a quarter of an hour intervened, when I saw one of the engines returning to Benalla. It was followed in five minutes by the second engine. Subsequently found the second engine contained Mr. Hare. About the time he was going away, I saw we were recklessly exposing our lives, and ordered the men to take cover. I dropped into a little gully running past the front of the house. Had five of my men with me. About half-an-hour after we took cover, a bullet struck a piece of wood in front of my position, which showed me I was not in a secure place. Followed down the gully until I came to a position, which I did not leave until superseded by Mr. Sadleir. From this position I commanded the whole of the house, and was convinced no man could get out of the front of the house without my knowledge. Senior-constable Kelly came to me and said, "Oh, my God, I believe the outlaws have all got away." I replied, "I'll swear they did not get out of the front, as I never left this place from the first attack." He said, "As I was passing round at the rear of the house, about 100 yards from the back door, I came on a rifle covered with blood and a skullcap." He said he believed the rifle belonged to the outlaws. Subsequently senior-constable Kelly again came to me and said he heard there were 40 prisoners in the kitchen of the hotel. In my report, dated September 7, I say Mr. Hare "never left the railway platform after he returned there." At any rate, he left the front. Am not aware of my own knowledge that he went to the platform. Heard he went to the platform and stopped there. Several volleys had been fired by the police when I was told there were prisoners in the kitchen. Mr. Sadleir, after that, made his way to my position, and spoke to me. Subsequently, at half-past 10 a.m., he sent for me. Went to him at the railway station. We had a long conversation. Ned Kelly had then been taken prisoner. Mr. Sadleir and I walked round the line of men, getting what information we could, and suggesting improvements in the way of watching the house. Mr. Sadleir says the outlaws let the prisoners out at a certain time, which I don't dispute. When the prisoners came out, they told us Joe Byrne had been shot. They came out about 11 o'clock. They said Byrne had been shot by a ball entering the front door while he was in the act of drinking a glass of grog to the toast, "Many more years in the bush with the Kelly gang." Mr. Sadleir and I conferred as to the desirableness of breaking into the house. When we considered there were two determined ruffians in it in invulnerable armour, and that, as the prisoners had told us, the doors were barricaded, we decided not to risk a single life if there was a chance of getting the remaining outlaws without doing so. Senior-constable Johnson proposed a plan to drive the outlaws from the cover. He proposed to set fire to the building, stating that when the smoke got thick the outlaws would rush out. Mr. Sadleir acquiesced, but deferred the execution of the plan. Called out to the outlaws to surrender. At last Mr. Sadleir ordered the plan to be carried out. A constable reported that a shot was fired from the house two hours before it was fired. Another man stated he saw Dan Kelly pass a window 20 minutes before it was burnt. We called to the outlaws to give them so many minutes before firing the house. Fired some heavy volleys, under cover of which Johnson set fire to the house. There was firing by the police after we were told that there were prisoners in the hotel, and before they were released. The prisoners were in the kitchen. Shots were exchanged after the police knew the prisoners were in the kitchen, which was a distinct building, separated by several feet from the main building, where the outlaws were. Did not believe about the number of people in the kitchen. There were about 15 or 20 that came out. We did not fire into the kitchen. I did not direct the force not to fire at the kitchen. Senior-constable Kelly went round to tell the police that. Did not order him to do so. At such a time of excitement one cannot always do the best thing. Believed if there were other people in the house they were friends of the Kellys. Believe a big gun was sent up from Melbourne towards Glenrowan. Captain Standish was responsible for that. The gun was stopped at Seymour. After I was told there were prisoners in the hotel premises, there was no indiscriminate firing into the buildings on my part or that of men near me. Cannot remember when I heard the old man Cherry was in the place wounded. The house was burnt, and the bodies of the two remaining outlaws were recovered with that of Joe Byrne. Was present when Cherry was taken out. Could not hear what he said. He could barely articulate. Captain Standish arrived at Glenrowan at half-past 5 p.m. He saw me, but took not the slightest notice of me until I put out my hand, which he just touched. Mr. Sadleir also told me Captain Standish was very cavalier in his manner to him. After a little delay nearly the whole party returned to Benalla. Captain Standish said he told Mr. Sadleir not to give up the charred bodies of Dan Kelly and Steve Hart. To the best of my recollection, heard Captain Standish tell Mr. Sadleir to give up the bodies to the friends of the outlaws. Recollect Kate Kelly trying to go to the house after it was set on fire. She was stopped by the police. She was asked if she would get them to surrender. "Surrender to you —— dogs? No! I would sooner see them burnt alive," she replied. Mr. Sadleir would not allow her to go on to the house. Before the priest went up to the hotel, Mr. Sadleir stopped him for a moment, but he went on and entered the house. Some men followed him. The priest said he saw the two outlaws, Dan Kelly and Steve Hart, dead. Captain Standish did not thank me or recognize me, except by touching my hand. At Benalla, I saw Mr. Hare, who said, "Let bygones be bygones," and seemed friendly. I had had a misunderstanding with Mr. Hare, but it was about a private matter. Can't remember any civilians offering to go into the house before it was burnt. My private quarrel with Mr. Hare did not interrupt my official communications with him. When I saw him at Benalla he gave me to understand he had recommended or approved of the burning of the house. Next morning I left Benalla for Melbourne. Mr. Hare and Ned Kelly were in the same train. At Euroa I got an Age newspaper containing an account of the affair. My name was not mentioned therein. Spoke to Mr. Hare about that, and he said, "Wait until you see the Argus. That makes you all right." The Argus report merely mentioned we were there. My friends thought either I had not been there, or had done nothing. Upon arriving at Queensland after that, my Government asked me to explain why I had not done my duty. That so stung me that I reported and resigned. When they asked me why I had not done this and that, and why Mr. Hare had done everything, I felt annoyed. The Queensland Commissioner of Police was hurt at my resignation, and begged of me to withdraw it. He said it was the Colonial Secretary who had called for a report. I agreed to withdraw my resignation. The Governor then sent for me, with the Colonial Secretary, and asked my opinion of several matters. Told them I must return to Victoria to demand an inquiry into Mr. Hare's report. They concurred, and, on that understanding, I came back to Victoria on leave of absence. There was such a delay in holding the inquiry that the Queensland Government told me they could not give me unlimited leave of absence. Then I resigned. The Queensland Government asked me to represent them officially at the inquiry in connection with the Kelly reward. I resigned in consequence of being unable to get an inquiry into this matter, but I don't say I should have stayed long in the force. From the time of the publication of Mr. Hare's report on the Glenrowan affair—which was calculated to make my services slightly esteemed, and to injure me seriously in my position as an officer of police—there has been a general opinion that I did nothing at Glenrowan. Captain Standish, on July 2, wrote to me conveying the thanks of the Governor of Victoria for my "important services" at the Glenrowan affair. For some time nearly every one thought Mr. Hare had done everything, from what appeared in his report and in the newspapers. Mr. Ramsay wrote to the Queensland Government, thanking them for the great services rendered by myself and men, and stating that we rendered most valuable assistance. In that letter it was stated that Captain Standish denied there was any jealousy between the Victorian and Queensland police. Captain Standish knew there was jealousy. Told Captain Standish, before that letter was written, that he had not treated us properly. There was no jealousy between Mr. Hare and myself. We all worked most harmoniously together, excepting Captain Standish. As bushmen, the Victorian police, as a body, were inefficient. Men also were sent up to Benalla who scarcely knew what a rifle was. As a body, they were most courageous men; they were also well disciplined. There were no guides, with local knowledge of the country, in the police force, and that was a great drawback. Mr. Nicolson made it his first duty to get guides. Mr. Hare used to go out with his own men from the Bourke district, instead of taking men with local experience. With regard to the long delay in capturing the Kellys, I attribute it to a great extent to the want of bush knowledge on the part of the police. As a rule they were not accustomed to leave the main roads. What was wanted were men in the force of the stockman type—good bushmen. The system of scouring the country in search parties was utterly useless. Did not notice any want of promptness of action. Certainly Captain Standish once ignored important information about the outlaws. That was when he heard they were in a hut. Do not think it would have been possible to cut the outlaws off from their supplies.

This ended Mr. O'Connor's evidence.

The commission adjourned until 11 o'clock next day.

THURSDAY, MARCH 31.

Present—Messrs. Longmore (chairman), Anderson, Gibb, Fincham, Graves, and Hall, Ms.L.A., and Mr. Dixon.

Francis Augustus Hare deposed: I joined the police force on 1st January, 1854, as lieutenant. My salary then was £500 a year, with all allowances I now have, and rations besides. I now receive £375 per annum without rations. I was promoted to the rank of superintendent in 1855, which I now hold. Had nothing to do with the Kelly business until the 28th October, 1878, the morning after the intelligence of the police murders reached Melbourne, when Captain Standish came to the depot and ordered me to get ready as many mounted men as possible, and also to get ready all available arms, and select as many horses as possible fit for work. Sent several mounted men that day to Benalla. For some weeks afterwards was busily engaged in Melbourne in getting horses and arms and instructing the men how to use them. Picked men, all splendidly mounted, were sent up. From that time to the Euroa bank robbery my time was fully occupied in sending men and supplies to the North-Eastern district. On 26th November, 1878, Captain Standish told me that Mr. Nicolson had informed him that he had obtained reliable information that the Kelly gang intended sticking up a bank, and that Mr. Nicolson had requested Captain Standish to tell me to take the necessary precautions with regard to the Bourke district. The Seymour bank was specially mentioned. Issued orders on the subject. On 30th November, 1878, informed the police at Seymour that the Kellys contemplated sticking up a bank there, that three men would be sent up in plain clothes, and that their presence was not to be divulged. With the three I sent up there were five men at Seymour. Also took similar precautions at Avenel and Nagambie. These were the nearest townships to the North-Eastern district. Ordered the local bank managers to be warned. Captain Standish undoubtedly told me he had received the information from Mr. Nicolson, who was then in charge of the North-Eastern district. On December 12, 1878, received a telegram from Captain Standish directing me to report myself with horse and accoutrements at Euroa that night. Forthwith left Melbourne, and met Captain Standish and Mr. Nicolson at Euroa. Captain Standish wanted me to go out that night in search of the gang. Said I knew nothing of the bank robbery but what I had seen in the papers, that it was unfair to thrust me suddenly into such a position, and that as two days had elapsed I did not care to rush into the matter without making inquiries. Besides I was unwell. A party of police started off next morning into the Strathbogie ranges under senior-constable Johnson. They remained away for six or seven days, but found no trace of anything. Set to work to gain knowledge of the constables and the district, and obtained general information as to what had been going on since the murders at the Wombat. Selected three very good men, and asked Captain Standish to give them the rank of senior-constable, and he complied with my request. The constables were Johnson, Mullane, and Flood. From time to time these sub-officers were sent out in charge of search parties. Rumours were constantly coming in. For instance, a rumour came in that the Kellys had been seen, or that provisions had been sent to them. We used to give the search parties such information, and left them unfettered as to their action. There were also sergeant James, of Mansfield; sergeant Steele, of Wangaratta; senior-constables Irwin (at Alexandra), Shoobridge (at Bright), and Kelly (at Bright), and others whom I have forgotten. At first I remained at Benalla, occupying my time in getting information. About this time the sympathisers were arrested by Captain Standish's orders. They had given us much trouble. The responsible police in the district, such as men in charge of stations and detectives, were collected at Benalla by Captain Standish's orders, and asked to name the sympathisers. Captain Standish, I, and Mr. Sadleir were present. About 20 sympathisers were named. The Government were aware of the action, and with their consent we did all this. It was necessary to capture all the sympathisers on one day, and it was done. All the sympathisers selected, with two or three exceptions, were arrested. They were arrested because they were annoying us and watching us. About five or six days before the Jerilderie robbery, Aaron Sherritt came to Benalla. Had never seen him before. He asked to see Captain Standish, who happened not to be at Benalla. Spoke to Aaron, who said he had important information. Led Aaron to believe I didn't care to hear his news, and kept him engaged in conversation. At last Aaron said, "I think I can trust you with my information." The information was that Joe Byrne and Dan Kelly had visited his selection, between Mrs. Byrne's and Mrs. Sherritt's houses. He said, "Joe Byrne jumped off his horse. He was always my most intimate acquaintance and schoolfellow. He sat down beside me. Dan Kelly was suspicious, however, and would not get off his horse. They asked me to join them, as they were going across the Murray to Goulburn, New South Wales, where the Kellys had a cousin. They wanted me to go as a scout." Aaron Sherritt never told me then they were going to stick up a bank in New South Wales. He refused to go with them. At last Byrne said, "Aaron, you are right; why should you mix yourself up with us?" They kept constant watch while talking to Aaron. He was a remarkable-looking man. Cautioned him not to be seen in Benalla. Gave him £2 for giving us this information. My impression was that the Kellys were going to leave the colony from what Aaron told me. He gave me the brands of the horses the two outlaws were riding. Believed his information true. Telegraphed the information to the border police on both sides of the river. One party of police was near Chiltern under senior-constable Mullane. Started them up the Murray in the direction of the place where the Kellys' friends lived, and a likely crossing place for Goulburn, New South Wales. They remained away six or seven days. Before they returned the Jerilderie bank had been stuck up. Senior-constable Strachan was also sent out. On the day after Sherritt gave me the information we heard Byrne and Dan Kelly had been seen riding towards the Murray. That corroborated Sherritt's statement. The Jerilderie robbery took place on 10th February, 1879. Sent parties immediately to every crossing place, and watched all suspected houses on the border. At first no tidings could be obtained. On the 15th February I went to Beechworth, where I met Sherritt by appointment. He told me that on the previous Wednesday Dan Kelly called at Mrs. Byrne's, and had his breakfast there, and told Mrs. Byrne that after the robbery they divided, and agreed to meet at a certain place. He had kept his appointment and the others had not, and he wanted to see what had happened to them. We received information that Dan Kelly was seen riding towards the Buckland gap. That again corroborated Sherritt's evidence. Aaron said to me that I ought to visit Mrs. Byrne's house next night, as he believed the outlaws were there. Had doubts about Sherritt, but afterwards ascertained he acted fairly to us. I had more confidence in him than many others. Agreed to go with him to watch the house. That was on Saturday, February 22. Made arrangements to meet him on the Sunday night, away from Beechworth. On Sunday went to Eldorado, where there was a party of police under charge of senior-constable Strachan. Ordered that Strachan should meet me at a certain spot at 9 o'clock that night. In company with detective Ward, I met Sherritt at the place he appointed. Then went to where I had ordered the constables to meet us. They were not there. After waiting, Sherritt said that if we did not start the outlaws would be away. Asked Ward if he would stick to me, and he said "Yes." Asked Sherritt to lead the way. We went through a terrible country. At last Sherritt pulled up his horse, and asked me if I saw anything. Said "No." He pointed out a fire ahead, and said the bushrangers were camped there. He said he never knew them to do that before, and that they must have drink with them. He said it must be the bushrangers. Dismounted, and sat on the ground. He said, "What is best to be done?" I said he ought to make certain first it was the bushrangers, and that he had better take off his boots and crawl up to the spot where the fire was. He did so, and remained away 10 minutes, leaving Ward and me. He came back and said the fire was three miles away. I said it was only 150 yards. I said, "Nonsense, Aaron; you have sold me." He said he had not. We rode on and rode on towards the fire, until we got to a precipice. Then found the fire was on the other side of a gully. I said we had made a mistake, and that we should hurry away and go to Mrs. Byrne's house. It was stated in the papers that on this occasion Ward and I saw the bushrangers, and watched them until the morning, when they were gone. We rode towards Mrs. Byrne's house. It was then about half-past 12 o'clock at night. Left our horses some distance off, and walked to Mrs. Byrne's. Saw a light, but heard no voices. Aaron crawled up to the house, listened, but heard no sound. He pointed out a spot where the outlaws used to tie up their horses when visiting Mrs. Byrne's. We went there, but saw nothing. The three of us went to a stockyard which Aaron said they must pass if they visited Mrs. Byrne's. We waited until daylight without seeing anything. Aaron said the outlaws had disappointed him, but would soon be there. We returned to Beechworth. I arranged for a permanent party to stay there, and stopped with them. Stayed there 25 nights, watching all night, and lying under a rock all day. At the same time, above us higher up the range, there was an old camp of the outlaws that Aaron pointed out. It was impregnable if attacked. Put four men there. Formed the second camp in the mountain about a mile from Mrs. Byrne's, where I used to retire at daylight after watching all night. Senior-constable Mills was with me, and senior-constable Mays was in charge of the upper camp. The duty was dangerous as well as irksome. Always felt anxious when going to our watching-place as to whether the outlaws might not be there. They might also have taken possession of our day camp while we were watching at night. The prospect of meeting the outlaws cheered us all up. We had a difficulty in getting water. We used to see Mrs. Byrne looking out for tracks. Of course, the police have peculiar tracks, wearing unusual boots. The nights were exceedingly cold. Through an accident Mrs. Byrne discovered our camp about the 20th day we were there. Aaron used to watch with us, in the daytime visiting Mrs. Byrne, who thoroughly trusted him. He was a sort of head centre or scout for the Kellys of this district. It was wonderful how he got information as to the movements of the police. It was also wonderful how he could stand hard work and want of sleep. He would watch all night and knock about all day. Sometimes asked him how he got information about the police, and he declined to say. He told me he had been concerned in all the crimes of the Kellys, but would give no definite information concerning himself, because he was afraid that he and I might fall out in the end. All this time he was faithful and true to me. His powers of endurance were surprising. One night when the water was frozen I actually saw him lying with his coat off. I was muffled up, and so were my men. He was born in the mountains. Believe his father was a constable at home. Aaron told me Ned Kelly was capable of still more endurance than himself; that he (Aaron) could beat the other three outlaws, but that Ned was an extraordinary man—that, in fact, he was superhuman. He told me Ned never rode first when the outlaws were travelling—that he sent the other three ahead of him, compelling the three to obey him at the point of the pistol. Ned was believed to be invulnerable; nearly every one in the district thought him invincible. Our camp near Mrs. Byrne's was, as I have said, discovered in an extraordinary manner by her. About the 20th day we were there one of the party in the upper camp went down to a watercourse with a bucket. Mrs. Byrne saw his tracks, and sent for Aaron, telling him there was a party of police in the mountains, and asking him to look for them. He pretended to look, and told her he had seen nothing of the party. Mrs. Byrne told him she had found some soap and the whittlings of a stick. A day or two after we were asleep with a sentry watching. He woke us, and told us the old woman was in our camp, and that Aaron was lying there asleep. Saw the old woman go away, and rushed to Aaron and woke him up. He showed himself in another part of the district as soon as possible. He went to the hut a night or two after, playing a flute as he went. When he got there, Mrs. Byrne told him he was a pretty fellow not to have found the police, as she had found them. We watched Mrs. Byrne leaving the camp. She discovered the camp through finding a sardine tin. She said she would try to get Joe to shoot the police at the camp. On one occasion saw the old woman going up the range to peer over a rock down into the camp. She used to do that. Determined to frighten her. As she passed a rock that a constable was hid behind, he gave a tremendous yell, and jumped at her. She almost fainted, but soon got impatient, and said she would get her son to shoot the lot of us. She was between 40 and 50 years old. Sherritt told me she could not communicate with the outlaws except through him. I went away, leaving the two parties, however, for about a fortnight longer near Mrs. Byrne's. Mr. O'Connor, with the Queensland men, arrived on March 8, 1879. After that went out frequently with search parties. In a thick, bushy country I used to put the man who knew the locality in the middle, and search in an extended line. We could scour the country in that way without being heard. In going up steep mountains or gullies the men would be about 20 yards apart, so that if an attack was made only one man would be overpowered. Mr. O'Connor gave some evidence about a house being searched. It was Cleary's house. The information came to us at Benalla. A note came from a certain person, stating that a party of four men had been seen on two occasions, and that they were going in the direction of Cleary's house, and that he thought they were the outlaws. The note gave no directions how to go to the place. It arrived on Saturday, May 24. Believing the information important, I at once consulted Captain Standish. He said he thought the information good, and that I should start first thing in the morning. Mr. O'Connor turned up, and asked the news. Referred him to Captain Standish, who had told me to tell no one, not even Mr. O'Connor. Up to that time Mr. O'Connor had been told everything. He was annoyed. Next morning at 6 o'clock I started with a party, and Mr. O'Connor lent me one of his boys. We started about 7 from Benalla, but in an opposite direction to where we were ultimately going. We met a sympathiser of the Kellys, named Nolan. At last we turned off into the right direction. We had with us a constable named Dixon, who knew the locality. That night we camped without making a fire. At 1 o'clock a.m. we again started, passed through Glenrowan gates, and took exactly the course recommended by my informant. Got to the locality half-an-hour before daylight, and saw the hut we had gone to see, viz., Cleary's. Sent three men to the back of the house, and told them to approach the house as we approached the front. At dawn we started for the house, and knocked. Cleary opened the door. Asked if he had any strangers in the house. He hesitated, and at last said, "Nolan." Searched the house thoroughly. Saw Nolan, and asked him what brought him there. He replied he had gone to warn the people there about a funeral. Asked where was the funeral, and he said, "The other side of Glenrowan." Thoroughly searched the premises; could find no trace of the outlaws. Nolan asked me why I went there, and said he supposed the blackfellow had traced him there. Took a circuit round Cleary's place, went back to the night's camp, and then returned to Benalla. Could find no traces whatever of the Kellys having been there. The party I usually took out were chiefly Bourke men. But generally I had also a constable who knew the Kellys and the country. By taking out my own men on all occasion, some jealousy was caused. But I knew my men and they knew me. The duty was arduous, and a great deal of responsibility was thrown on the leader. Shared the work with the men. Getting feed for the horses was a great difficulty. We never slept in a tent when out, and very seldom, indeed, had a fire after dark. The men kept in good spirits. Had a splendid party with me. We deserved success. Had I not been ill, we must have come across the gang. In sending out parties my idea was to compel the outlaws to be constantly on the watch. Did not like to let them have possession of the country. My men were only too anxious to meet the outlaws. They sometimes begged me to let a fire be lit, hoping it would attract the Kellys. The gang knew our movements. Ned Kelly, after his arrest, told a constable of our movements when in the bush. Ned described the two men who used to catch the horses in the morning. Our search parties generally consisted of seven or eight men. But if allowance was made for three or four shot down at the first volley there would not be too many. The trackers were used in a wrong way. They had to carry a large baggage. Victorian police should also have been with them. Can only recollect being out with them once, and didn't approve of their mode of working. Mr. Sadleir and Mr. Nicolson differed from me on this point. One or two trackers might be useful. Once if I had had a tracker I could have got the outlaws. Received information on this occasion about the outlaws having been in the ironbark country. Searched it up to the Warby Ranges, on the Wangaratta side. Was looking for a site for a camp at sunset, and came across a place where a fresh track of two horses went up into the ranges. Were then two miles from a well-known sympathiser's house. We camped and had tea. Suddenly the men jumped up and said the Kellys were coming to us. Saw two young men galloping straight for us. When they reached us both men were recognised as sympathisers, one being the son of the sympathiser near whose house we were. Asked them what they were doing there, and they replied they had come to see what our smoke was. Said there were two tracks of horses, and they said they knew nothing about them. They became very impertinent. Senior-constable Mays, who was with me, said he believed the Kellys were near. He and two men went to the sympathiser's house with the two young men. Ordered them to let no person leave the house that night. One of the constables (Lawless) with Mays was like Steve Hart. As they approached the sympathiser's house its occupants came out. One of the men there said to Lawless, "Is that you, Hart?" When the man saw Lawless distinctly he turned deadly pale, and said he thought it was the outlaws. They sent me word of what had occurred, and I went down. Feared that some inoffensive individual might be shot. Ordered the house to be surrounded. Gave them the most positive orders that no shot was to be fired until I fired. We watched outside the house until 6 a.m. About 3 a.m. I consulted with the sergeant, and we decided to get out four additional men. They came out, under Senior-constable Kelly. Told him to watch the place next day, and allow no one to leave until I had given orders. At daybreak we had breakfast, and followed the two tracks into the mountains for some miles. We then dismounted, and followed the tracks on foot. Found other tracks joining in. About 1 o'clock we lost the tracks, and had to return to the camp. Next morning went towards the Winton side of the Warby Ranges. We saw a hut, an occupant of which said a fire had been seen on the top of an adjacent mountain. Knew it was not a police camp. Next morning went to the mountain, and, with my men, ascended it. Found the live embers of a fire. Next day went towards Glenrowan. Came to a high hill, and we ascended it also. Saw a fresh track, as of a man just having slid off a rock. There were the marks of a man's boot heel. We tried to follow the track, but could not. Ascended another hill. On the top of each hill I found stones recently removed and placed on edge or on top of one another. Sent word to Captain Standish, who wrote to Mr. O'Connor. I did not ask Captain Standish to do so. That was the time when Mr. O'Connor was at Dogamero station on the King River, and got traces of a horse. One afternoon on this trip when I was on top of a hill, I saw one of my constables with a second person, a gentleman resident in the locality. Questioned the gentleman about the stones displaced on the hills and the track. He said nobody he knew had been there. He took us to a tent near water, in which there was some horse feed and the appliances of a bee hunter. There were tracks of horses. Watched the place, but no one came. Visited the place again at daybreak next morning, but still no one was there. Mr. O'Connor referred to an occasion when, as he said, the constables could not keep up with a black tracker. The tracker went at a hard gallop on a track, and it was as much as we could do to keep up with them. At last he was stopped by a road on which there was much traffic. The track was of four horses. We followed the track back until we came to a place where, as Moses the tracker showed us, the horses had been unsaddled. Ascertained the tracks were of a police party. I think that is the way the blackfellows should be worked in such country. One tracker should accompany a party of white troopers. As trackers they cannot be overvalued. Was removed from the district. Arrived there on 12th December, 1878, and was removed from the district on July 7, 1879.

To the Commission.—We carried our provisions on pack-horses. A search party would stay out as long as its provisions lasted. The police were well known by everyone in the district, and it was well known when we were out. There were our tracks, and the horses had Crown brands. During the time I was in the district I believe the Kellys were there all the time. Believe if we had had some of the Queensland trackers with us that time on the Warby Ranges where we saw the tracks we should have caught the Kellys. Greta is about 12 miles from the hills where we saw the tracks. My men were fully armed, and thoroughly acquainted with the use of firearms. My plans were interfered with by my superior officer. When information came, Captain Standish, Mr. Sadlier, Mr. O'Connor, and I used to discuss it. We were all on the most intimate terms possible all the time we were at Benalla, and all the ill-feeling shown before this commission has arisen since I first left the district. Captain Standish, Mr. O'Connor, and I lived together like brothers. Mr. O'Connor and I were unusually close friends. He and I had both a very great regard for one another. He made my house his home when he came down to Melbourne. I don't say Captain Standish and Mr. O'Connor had not little quarrels. There was chaffing between them. Sometimes Captain Standish was very nasty, and there used to be a row between them. Next day all would go on as usual. Mr. O'Connor had a sharp temper, and would not stand Captain Standish's chaff. Do not know how Captain Standish could be said to have hindered the capture of the Kellys. Mr. O'Connor and Mr. Sadlier used to remark often on the indifference displayed by Captain Standish as to the Kelly business. Captain Standish, whenever I spoke to him, always showed the utmost interest in the matter. We all, including the constables, were intent on capturing the Kellys. As to the statement that the Kellys were not captured through squabbles amongst the officers, I can say I never threw away a chance. Captain Standish did not go out with search parties. He used to spend his time at Benalla, in the general supervision of affairs. Captain Standish told me that Mr. Berry had suggested he should take charge of the North-eastern district. Captain Standish wanted to return to Melbourne before he did return, but Sir Bryan O'Loghlen, then acting Chief Secretary, requested him to stay up. The colour of the horse rode away by the outlaws from Euroa was known, and sympathisers used to get similar horses and ride all over the country to mislead us. Rumours were constantly coming in. When the parties got information they had to send word to head-quarters before acting on it. We had to know at head-quarters what direction the parties were in, or they might have clashed. I do not believe that there was 10 minutes delay when any party sent me information. The information could be sent off in 10 minutes. If a search party were out, and received fresh information, they were at liberty to act on it forthwith, without first returning to head-quarters for instruction.

The commission here adjourned until 11 o'clock next day.

The Irish Disestablished Church is likely to suffer severely on account of the land agitation, and it is suggested by some that an appeal be made to the Church of England in its behalf. Many landlords have ceased to contribute to the Church, and others have reduced their donations.

MONETARY AND COMMERCIAL.

Saturday Evening.

In the Import markets we hear of little business being carried through to-day. The splendid rainfall throughout the country will tend to improve trade. It is expected also that the incoming of the over-due ships will stimulate business to some extent. In addition to the ships arriving yesterday, we have now to record the arrival of the East Croft, from Liverpool, with a general cargo valued at £41,300. The American ship Great Surgeon, which came in this morning from New York via Melbourne, brings a quantity of general cargo. The Minora, brig, from Mauritius, has likewise arrived, bringing a cargo of sugar and bags.

By cable from London we learn that the Oriental Bank Corporation has declared a dividend of 2 per cent. for the half-year ending December last, and carried the sum of £17,000 to the reserve fund.

Messrs. Melhado and Curtis report the yield from the Band and Albion Consols Gold-Mining Company for last week to be 325 oz. from 760 tons crushed.

Commenting on the state of trade in the United Kingdom during the year 1880, the Economist of the 8th January says that "M. Richard Seyds' annual statistics of failure show that last year there was a considerable diminution in the number of bankruptcies, the total for 1880 being 13,147, as compared with 16,687 in the previous year. Of these 1478 were in the financial, wholesale, and manufacturing trades, the number in 1879 being 2548. Every branch of business and every district of the country show a decrease, the falling-off in point of number being especially marked in Scotland, where in 1879 there were 232 bankruptcies, as compared with 99 last year. No doubt it is to the failure of the City of Glasgow Bank that the greater number of Scotch failures in 1879 are attributable, and in this connection it may be noted that while in 1879 five banks came to grief, there was in 1880 only one banking failure—that, namely, of the Hull District Bank. In the retail trade also there is shown a general decrease in the number of insolvencies, but the failures of farmers have continued to be numerous, amounting to 1223; 1045 failed in England and Wales, 82 in Scotland, and 96 in Ireland. It is to the weeding-out in 1879, in consequence of the bank crisis of the previous autumn, of a great many rotten firms, as well as to the subsequent improvement of trade, that the decrease in the number of insolvencies last year is mainly attributable. Trade is now on a generally sound basis, and it is reasonably hoped that there will be a continued improvement in the course of 1881."

The Sydney Morning Herald.

MONDAY, APRIL 4, 1881.

In Saturday's issue, a well-informed correspondent offered some criticisms on the policy of Great Britain in the South Seas. A week or two ago, Sir Arthur Gordon published a memorandum on the same subject. The testimony of our correspondent is that the state of affairs in the South Seas is eminently unsatisfactory, while Sir Arthur Gordon labours to show that there is little or no ground for complaint. It may be questioned whether the public, after looking at both sides, will come to the conclusion which commends itself to the High Commissioner.

Sir Arthur Gordon begins, if not by disputing the facts on the ground of which the late Conference took action, by intimating that there has been a great deal of exaggeration. He complains that there was no statistical table before the Conference from which exact information could be drawn as to the comparative frequency of murders in the Pacific, or as to the proportion which those murders bear to the number of European residents in those seas now and formerly. All the information before the Conference, he says, was contained in a telegram without date, and in four newspaper paragraphs containing details of other murders. "These paragraphs are undoubtedly written in good faith, and no doubt contain the best account obtainable by the editor of the transactions to which they refer, but it is often found on subsequent examination that such narratives are, owing to very obvious causes, not always to be relied on as strictly accurate." The tone of scepticism which this sentence expresses runs through the whole of this memorandum.

Sir Arthur Gordon seems to wish his readers to understand that it is doubtful whether some of these massacres reported really occurred, or, at least, whether they have been anything like so numerous as the public have been led to believe. He does not exactly question whether there have been murders, but he gravely doubts whether there has been anything to justify the alarm that has been raised. The colonial public are scarcely likely to take this view. No one else has questioned the substantial accuracy of the stories of outrage which have been reaching us so frequently for many months past. If these stories were not true there would surely have been some intimation of the fact. It is possible enough that there are occasional inaccuracies in the reports we get from the Pacific. These will creep into all reports; but the main question is, have the massacres which have been reported really occurred? It matters little whether the vehicle through which the information is given is a newspaper or a State paper.

Nor is there any force in the objection that the late Conference had no statistical table before it. It may be doubted whether, if such a table had been asked for, there was anybody who could have furnished it. There may be no one who knows exactly how many Europeans there are in the Pacific, or how many murders occurred in the islands years ago. Suppose such information were available, what necessary end would it answer? Under circumstances like those which have taken place in the South Seas, no Government would delay action until details were cleared up and information had been tabulated as to the proportion of the murders to the population, and the rate of increase in one year over any given year preceding.

Having disputed the facts on the basis of which the Conference took action, Sir Arthur Gordon complains of the demand for the interference of the authorities. He would have it understood that, if the massacres had been quite as numerous as they are said to be, the idea that the officers of the British Government should inflict punishment on those who are responsible for them would be a mistaken one. If a trader thrusts himself into out-of-the-way places in the islands, Sir Arthur says he does it on his own responsibility and at his own risk. Whether in out-of-the-way places or not, it seems that a British subject, as such has no right to claim British protection. "Such protection," says Sir Arthur Gordon, "cannot be claimed as a right," and, again, "None but those who are employed on public duty are entitled to such protection." "Where men withdraw themselves from the operation of the institutions of their own country they take their lives in their hands, and have no right to expect to receive the forcible support of the State whose sheltering protection they have left." The doctrine which Sir Arthur Gordon lays down in his memorandum is that we have no jurisdiction over the natives, and that, unless in extraordinary cases, we are not warranted in calling them to account for their actions.

But this view is not so clear to others as it seems to be to Sir Arthur Gordon himself. It is admitted that if men, for their own ends, place themselves in a position of danger, they must take the consequences. We all know that when men engage in daring adventures they forfeit their right to claim the protection of the State. But it is worthy of note that many, perhaps a large majority, of the massacres that have taken place in the Islands have occurred, not in new and distant districts, but in old and central ones. These massacres have happened not because people have placed themselves in positions of danger—men have been captured and clubbed in parts which they have been in the habit of frequenting for years, and where they have apprehended no danger of any kind. Now, although other Powers give their subjects to understand that if they travel beyond the pale of civilization they have no right to expect to be followed, no Power that is represented in the Pacific holds that if the natives take it into their heads to plunder and murder they must be allowed to do this with impunity. Germany, for example, would repudiate such a notion as that, and we have repudiated it also. Our correspondent pointed out on Saturday that we have really been in the habit of claiming a jurisdiction over the natives of the Pacific. For what purpose have her Majesty's ships been kept in that part? It has not been simply to declare war or to provide against it. Our war vessels have been in the habit of going to the South Seas for the very purposes of a jurisdiction over the natives. And whatever question there may be as to the right of British subjects to claim the protection of Great Britain in out-of-the-way regions, there can be none as to their right to claim that protection in those centres where intercourse is established between the whites and the natives, and which have long been open to trade.

But Sir Arthur Gordon insists that whatever protection may be claimed from other quarters, none can be demanded from the High Commissioner. That officer, he says, has nothing to do with protecting the whites from the blacks, and little with protecting the blacks from the whites. His business, he says, is chiefly to settle disputes which one white man may have with another. This is hardly the view of the functions of the High Commissioner which the public of these colonies have been in the habit of taking. It has generally been supposed that before this office was established the naval authorities exercised jurisdiction over the natives on their own responsibility, and that on the appointment of Sir Arthur Gordon to the High Commissionership of Polynesia this state of things was altered, and that the naval authorities were required to confer with the High Commissioner before taking any action save that of declaring war. This view is indeed warranted by one of the paragraphs in Sir Arthur Gordon's own memorandum. He tells us that until a few months since the Commodore in employing her Majesty's naval force on the station acted "entirely independently of the High Commissioner, and on his own responsibility alone. Lately he has been instructed, wherever possible, to consult the High Commissioner before proceeding to active hostilities; but no proposal made by him has ever been objected to by the High Commissioner, between whom and the Commodore there exist the most entire confidence and agreement." This explanation is hardly in keeping with the position that the High Commissioner has nothing to do with the protection of the whites from the natives. The High Commissioner may have no control over the movements of the Australian squadron; but he may be able to direct those movements, and the public have been misinformed if he has not been in the habit of doing this. It is well known, indeed, that before the Commodore takes any action in which the natives may be concerned it is his custom to consult the High Commissioner. If this be the case, the public will fail to see with what correctness it can be said that "the jurisdiction of the High Commissioner extends over all British subjects in the Western Pacific, but over British subjects exclusively. He has no authority whatever to deal, whether judicially or in his executive capacity, with the offences of natives of islands not under the dominion of the Crown."

Mr. S. C. Brown was carrying out his honest convictions of duty in reviving the discussion upon the Milburn Creek Company's compensation vote; but the case was practically settled by the debate and division upon the estimate. The rejection or even the reduction of the item would have been a vote of censure upon the Government; and in matters of such a kind a Government that has a strong majority of not over-critical supporters may generally await the issue with confidence. This case has been settled by party votes and not upon its merits. The utmost excuse that can be offered for the action of the majority is that in a certain sense the public honour appeared to have been pledged; and under certain circumstances it is better to suffer the loss of money than even seem to forfeit honour. Now that the money is voted, and the honour of the country is vindicated, the right course would be to censure and punish the Government for placing the country in a false position, and betraying its interests. But if such a proposal were made it would be rejected on the ground of inexpediency; and so, in working out what men are pleased to call responsible government, the Ministry will be relieved of all responsibility for what hereafter will be regarded as one of those great political blunders which are as bad as crimes. It need not be asserted that the company had no claim whatever to compensation from the Government; but, as Mr. Stuart pointed out, the company's claim should have extended only to damage sustained through the acceptance of a worthless lease. So far as the company was misled into the outlay of money by the action of the Government in giving what purported to be a lease over land which it had no right to lease to the company, the claim to compensation might have been admitted. But the company will now get compensation for the loss of property to which it never had a legal claim. The Government wholly misconceived its duty in admitting as to principle the full claim of the company, and appointing irresponsible people to determine absolutely the amount that should be paid. It is true that a select committee recommended the company's case to the favourable consideration of the Government. But what are the recommendations of committees worth? As Mr. HOSKINS said on Friday, when referring to another claim for compensation, "in nine cases out of ten, the evidence adduced before a select committee was altogether one-sided, and favourable to the alleged claims of the promoter, and hence the report was worth little. This had been the case in this instance, no person being examined but those who were in favour of the petitioner." Were these the views of Mr. HOSKINS as to the report on the claim in which his own colleague was interested, and if not, why not? The committee in that case knew that the company had been ejected by proceedings in the Supreme Court; but the evidence before the committee does not include the Judge's notes of the evidence upon which the verdict was founded. But, passing by that point, it should be observed that when the committee recommended the case to the favourable consideration of the Government, and the House adopted the committee's report, the hands of the Government were in no way tied, nor was the course to be taken marked out in any definite way. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL says that "clearly what was meant was that the Government should either make an award or submit the matter to arbitration," and that "if the Government were right in going to arbitration, they were right in having the decision of the arbitrators made a rule of Court." This is equivalent to saying that the Committee and the House meant "either" that the Government should act upon its responsibility in determining the principle of assessment and naming the amount the House should be asked to vote, or that the Government should divest both itself and the House of all discretionary power in the matter, and let the principle be settled, and the amount be fixed by arbitrators behind the back or over the head of Parliament. The ATTORNEY-GENERAL's alternative proves too much. If the Committee and the House left the Government free to choose between two courses which were diametrically opposed in principle, the Government was left free to act for the good of the country in the way that would best uphold the right of Parliament to control expenditure. The Government, being thus free, deliberately chose the course that took the matter out of the control of Parliament, and thus, either blindly or with its eyes open—we are not sure which—struck a heavy blow against one of those fundamental principles of the Constitution which the PREMIER is always so ready to quote when they seem to support his own action. Let it be admitted, as Mr. WISDOM says, that in emergencies a Government should have power to spend money without the previous sanction of Parliament. But that principle does not cover this case. The complaint is that in this case the Government, taking advantage of a Parliamentary recommendation, which did not amount to an appropriation of public money, entered into an agreement which virtually placed the power of appropriating public money in the hands of certain irresponsible arbitrators, by consenting to give their decision the force of a Supreme Court judgment. The Government did not simply act on its own responsibility; it transferred some of the powers of Parliament to private people, and then told the House that it must ratify what these private people had done, or compromise the public honour.

A somewhat curious case, arising out of a conditional purchase, was decided the other day, on appeal, by the Chief Justice, Mr. Justice HARGRAVE and Sir WILLIAM MANNING. The case, "Daniel and others v. Wallace," is stated shortly in our report:—"It had appeared at the hearing that the plaintiffs in this suit, who constitute the firm of George King and Co., of Sydney, by their bill claimed that the defendant, an infant, should be declared a trustee for them of certain lands conditionally purchased in the years 1872 and 1874 in the name of the infant defendant, by his father, on the station of Dangelong, in the Monaro district, which, with the stations, had formerly been held by the plaintiffs as mortgagees from the firm of Wallace, Brothers, of which firm the defendant's father had been a member. The plaintiffs founded their claim upon allegations that the moneys used for taking up the selections and for making the improvements thereon had been obtained by the defendants from them as advances under the mortgage, and that the lands in question had been so taken up in the name of the infant defendant for the benefit of the mortgagees. Evidence on behalf of the infant defendant had been given to show that the lands in question had been taken up by the father solely for the benefit of the infant defendant; that the defendant had always resided on it, and had improved it with moneys and labour other than that furnished by the plaintiffs, and that all this had been going on for several years with the knowledge of the plaintiffs; and, further, that the purchases in question had been made by the father as an advancement for the infant defendant." The bill was dismissed by the Primary Judge, and the plaintiffs appealed against his decision. The Full Court unanimously reversed the decree, after hearing argument. The Court held that the selection had been taken up with money supplied by the plaintiffs, and was one of several taken up on their behalf, as mortgagees, for the improvement of the runs. The application had been signed "HUGH WALLACE, by his father HENRY WALLACE." Had the father taken up the land in his own name he would have been a trustee, and the trust would have resulted to the mortgagees. HUGH WALLACE, the son, however, was to be considered the selector. But although he knew nothing of the transaction, and there was no privity between him and the mortgagees, the Court held that he was a trustee for the plaintiffs of the land in question, on the ground that "if the infant takes the consequences of those actions of his father which improve his position he must take the consequences of all his father's actions. Before the infant defendant could get the benefit arising out of his father's agency, a Court of Equity must see that the agency itself was not tainted." The selections in question were taken up under the Act of 1861, in the years 1872 and 1874. Had they been made a few years later, the whole transaction would probably have been invalid. Under the 9th section of the Act of 1875, "no person shall become the conditional purchaser of any land who is in respect of the land which he applies to purchase, or any part thereof, a trustee for any other person." It is to be presumed, therefore, that had the selection been made after the passing of this Act, the declaration by the Court that HUGH WALLACE was a trustee for the mortgagees would have been equivalent to a declaration that he had never become the conditional purchaser of the land, and the selection would have been liable to forfeiture. The Act of 1875, however, has no retrospective effect in this matter, and it is therefore to be supposed that the conditional purchase stands good, and the trust may be enforced. How many more conditional purchases are there in a similar position? There may be scores, or hundreds; and if so, we have another illustration of the failure of the law of 1861 to secure its professed objects. The law was intended to promote the settlement of the land by men of comparatively small means, who were allowed to take it up under the easiest of terms, so far as mere outlay of money was concerned, but were hedged round with conditions which were relied upon as effectual for the purpose of fencing off the capitalist and preventing his easy acquisition of territory. But here we see how the capitalist may have come in to take the land, not only by the intermediate agency of dummies and direct agents, but also through resulting trusts, to which the trustees—as infants—had no privity. The land was secured in this way "for the improvement of the runs." What does this mean but the preservation of the runs for pastoral leasehold purposes, against purchase for purposes of settlement? We have heard of driving a coach-and-four through an Act of Parliament: but the Act of 1861 has resembled the arena of a circus, traversed by equestrians with reins radiating from their hands to the mouths of troops of horses. When a baby in arms is capable of choosing a piece of land and applying for it, paying a deposit, making improvements, and fulfilling the residence condition, why should he not also be capable of being a trustee for the person who supplies the cash, and pulls the strings and works the oracle, with the object of anticipating and providing against invasion by adult settlers?

It is satisfactory to find that the revenue still shows an upward tendency, although, as will be seen from the various items in the returns, our financial prosperity is confined chiefly to the Lands Department. The net increase on the March quarter as compared with the corresponding quarter of last year is £464,765 3s. 8d. Of this increase, £325,000 is in the shape of land revenue, and about £29,000 comes from Customs. The Stamp duties and the Public school fees come in as new sources of income, and together they make about £45,000. From railways there is an increase of £58,000, which of course is due to the extended lines and to the growing traffic. The Post Office shows an increase of about £10,000. The increase in these items will be equal to the net increase for the quarter. The two items in the land revenue which show the largest increase are those under the heads of Improved Purchases and of Deposits on Conditional Purchases. The increase in the first of these items is £163,000, or more than one-third of the entire increase for the quarter; that in the second amounts to £58,000. These figures indicate that the demand for land still keeps up; and the item under the head of improved purchases especially shows that the squatters are still successfully doing battle with the selectors. The amount named comes from lands which have been purchased by virtue of improvements. Under the new Act the public have an increased guarantee that the improvements shall not be of a fictitious character; still there are numbers of instances in which improvements are made with a view to purchase, and the fact to which the item chiefly points is that the squatters are fast increasing their hold on the public estate. If we knew exactly what proportion of the conditional purchases that have been taken up are in the hands of squatters, and what proportion are owned by bona-fide selectors, we might be better able to tell the extent to which the item of £58,000 as increase under the head of Deposits on Conditional Purchases indicates the growth of settlement. On this point, however, we are necessarily left to conjecture. The expansion of the land revenue will help to keep the Government in funds; it may also point to the easy condition of the money market, but it is hardly a matter for very great jubilation. The £29,000 increase in Custom duties also, although it shows that our purchasing power is being kept up, is not without its drawbacks. Of this total increase an increase of £19,000 belongs to the head of spirits and tobacco; and this, of course, is not traceable to an increase in the consumption of these articles. For the sake of the public morals and of the public health, no one would like the increase to point to such a conclusion.

The exclusion of ministers of religion from Parliament, as embodied in the new Reform Bill in Victoria, has naturally been viewed with great resentment by some, at least, of the persons whom it is proposed to disqualify. Something may be said in support of such disqualification; but there is reason for believing that the exclusion is due quite as much to the influence of traditional custom as to any ripe consideration of the reasons for and against. Clergymen are not competent to sit in the British House of Commons, and their exclusion is clearly not due to any conviction that their profession unfits them for participation in the duties of legislation, inasmuch as in the House of Lords seats are found for the whole bench of Bishops. The most probable reasoning for this distinction is that ordinary parish priests and clergymen had duties of a nature so vital and so absorbing as to require all their devotion and time; while Bishops, as administrative officers of the Church, might fitly participate in the management of national affairs. Be that as it may, it is certain that in Great Britain the prohibition to clergymen has, by progressive change of circumstances, developed a singular anomaly. As only clergymen of the State Church are recognized by the law, the modern result of the disqualification has been that ministers of dissenting bodies have found their way into the House of Commons, and are thus in a position to vote for disestablishment should that matter ever come to a division; while the clergy of the State Church are shut out and debarred from the direct employment of their proportionate influence. In these colonies the reasons which support the exclusion of clergymen seem altogether outweighed by those which favour their admission. Even granting that professional theologians form a peculiar caste, disabled by the singularity of their position from forming a just estimate of the current of popular thought and ideas—which is granting much more than would be generally conceded—that would be a sufficient reason why they should not be elected, but certainly not a good reason why they should be disqualified without exception. The more free a system of representation is, the more accurate it is likely to become. If there be actual and practical disabilities inherent in the clerical nature, the electors would find them out soon enough, and would simply reject candidates of that class. If, on the other hand, ministers of religion are not in sympathy with the body of the people they would fail to secure election, and therefore disqualification would be unnecessary. The most serious objection, perhaps, lies in the anticipation that ministers of rival creeds might offer themselves for a constituency, and thus import into electoral affairs, in an aggravated form, that sectarian passion which it must be the anxious desire of every thoughtful man to repress; but when it is considered that as a matter of fact sectarian feeling is sedulously fostered and enlisted by secular candidates, who openly invite ministers to act as their lieutenants and whippers-in, it is not clear wherein lies the benefit of disqualification. A fair field and no favour is a capital maxim, and it is just as applicable to systems of representation as to anything else.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE Græco-Turk frontier difficulty remains unsettled, although it has advanced one stage further. The Government at Athens have declined to accept the basis laid down by Turkey, and approved by the other Powers, unless further concessions, which are specified, are granted. Thus, the responsibility of deciding whether dispute is to be settled peaceably, or by an appeal to arms, is once more thrown upon the Porte. Greece has waived her claim to Epirus, and this may facilitate a pacific solution of the question. The reply of Turkey, our message adds, is awaited with anxiety. From a statement made by the Government, in the House of Commons, it seems that a large British force, of not less than 12,000 men of all arms, is to be kept at the Transvaal for some time to come. The discontented Boers are now venting their ill-humour upon those who, during the recent rebellion, remained loyal to the British, and their conduct in this respect has been such as to evoke a strong protest from Sir Evelyn Wood. Mr. Bradlaugh, acting upon the decisions of the law courts, has resigned his seat as representative in the House of Commons for Northampton, but is soliciting re-election for the same constituency. The Earl of Beaconsfield continues seriously ill. Friday's bulletin reported him weaker, although his general condition was improved, and the last bulletin states that his weakness continues, whilst the general condition of his lordship remains unaltered.

OUR cable messages of this morning announce the death of Sir Charles Reed, F.S.A. From "Men of the Time" we take the following brief particulars of his life:—"Sir Charles Reed, F.S.A., second son of the Rev. Andrew Reed, D.D., founder of the London Orphan Asylum, the Infant Orphan Asylum, and the Earlswood Asylum for Idiots, was born at Sonning, near Reading, Berkshire, June 20, 1819. He was educated at Hackney Grammar School and at University College, London. Sir Charles is the head of the 'Fann-street Letter Foundry,' London, and he is actively concerned in the charitable institutions founded by his father. He represented the borough of Hackney in the Liberal interest from December, 1868, till April, 1874, when he retired from the House of Commons. In the latter year he was elected chairman of the London School Board (of which he had previously been vice-chairman), and received the honour of knighthood. He was one of the English Commissioners for the Paris Exhibition of 1878, and for his services was nominated an officer of the Legion of Honour. He became a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries (1852), Conservator of the River Thames (1860), Justice of the Peace for Middlesex and Westminster (1872), Trustee of 'George Peabody's Donation Funds' (1873), Special English Commissioner to the Philadelphia Exhibition, and chairman of Judges of Award on Education (1875); Doctor of Laws, Yale University, United States (1876); and president of the 'Sunday School Union of England and Wales' (1877). He is the author of 'A Plea for a Free Library for the City of London' (1855); 'Life and Philanthropic Labours of Andrew Reed, D.D.' (1868); 'Our Educational Experiment,' an address delivered before the Social Science Congress at Brighton (1876); Report on the Educational Department of the Philadelphia Exhibition (1876); Annual Addresses to the School Board for London (1871) to (1877); and other educational treatises and pamphlets. He married, in 1845, Margaret, daughter of the late Edward Baynes, Esq., M.P."

THE regulations for the forthcoming Easter encampments, which were published in the Herald of Saturday, are almost identical with those issued last year, the only perceptible difference being in regard to the allowance of food, which will be slightly increased. Experience has probably proved that camp life tends somewhat to increase the activity of the digestive organs, and consequently it will be good news for the majority of the Volunteers to learn that they will have no difficulty on this occasion in appeasing their appetites. The daily meat rations, which last year consisted of 1¼ lb., is to be increased to 1½ lb.; and, in addition to this liberal allowance of animal food, a special extra ration, consisting of ½ oz. of coffee, 2 oz. of sugar, and ½ gill of milk, will be issued daily to each man on guard. Victoria Barracks and Middle Head have again been chosen as the sites for the two encampments, the former for the Volunteer Infantry and Engineers, and the latter for the N.S.W. Permanent Artillery, the Volunteer Artillery, and the Torpedo and Signalling Corps. Victoria Barracks will, as heretofore, be the head-quarters' camp, where Colonel Richardson (the Commandant) will probably have 1300 or 1400 men under canvas, comprising the following corps:—The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Regiments of N.S.W. Volunteer Infantry, the Volunteer Engineer Corps, and the various corps from Newcastle, Maitland, Bathurst, Goulburn, Windsor, and Parramatta; the Head-quarters' band will also be present. The Artillery Camp at Middle Head, which will be under the command of Colonel Roberts, will muster somewhere about 550 men, consisting of the New South Wales Permanent Artillery (excepting those on duty at the various batteries), the New South Wales Regiments of Volunteer Artillery, including the detachments from Newcastle and Wollongong, and the Torpedo and Signalling Corps; the Permanent Force band will also be quartered with its regiment. The period of continuous training for the Volunteers will commence on Good Friday, the 15th instant, and terminate on the following Wednesday; the Permanent Force will, however, go under canvas prior to that date, and remain there a day or two later. The Wollongong Corps of Artillery will probably be the first of the Volunteers in the field, as they will most likely reach their destination before 11 o'clock on the night of the 14th, but all the Corps will be "in harness" by noon of the 15th. The arrangements for the reception and quartering of the various corps at each encampment are published in extenso in the Brigade order, which also gives full details for the guidance of those who intend going into camp.

WE are indebted to the hon. Minister for Mines for a copy of the following telegram, received by him from Mr. Warden Thompson, of Mount Poole, dated Wilcannia, April 1:—"Last week five men nearly perished, and their seven horses perished, on the new Bourke track. They were there three days and nights without water. One man cut his arm and drank his own blood, another threw away his clothes, and they were all nearly mad when they got to the water at Milbring. There is no water on Bourke track for one hundred and twenty miles, and men will perish if they come that way. Last week large numbers of people left the diggings. I reserved the Peak Waterhole for domestic use, so as to enable the people to get water on the road. On Sunday we had one hundred and twenty (120) points of steady soaking rain, but it did not put any water in the creek at the diggings. The mailman says the rain did not put any water in the holes between here and Cobham Lake."

THE information we published on Saturday that the ship Dauntless, which arrived on Friday from New York, has on board four of the tramway motors ordered by the Railway department for use upon the city and suburban tramways will be good news for the people of Waverley, for this accession to the motive power of the Department will enable them to run continuously to Waverley, the same as to Woollahra and other suburbs. It is expected that the new motors will be landed and set up ready for use in the course of about a fortnight. The extension of the tramway to Waverley will probably be ready to open in the course of a week.

WE understand that it is in contemplation by the residents of Forest Lodge and Glebe Point to request the Mayor of the borough to convene a public meeting at an early date, for the purpose of appointing a deputation to wait upon the Government to urge the necessity of proceeding immediately with the construction of the tramway to the above localities. Although the omnibuses run at short intervals to and from these suburbs, they do not offer anything like adequate accommodation, and very great inconvenience is experienced in consequence.

HIS Imperial Japanese Majesty's ship Riujio, which put into Sydney a few days ago for coal, will leave at 10 a.m. to-day, in continuation of her journey to Melbourne, and after a short stay at the southern metropolis will go to Hobart Town and thence to New Zealand. She may afterwards return to Sydney on her way home; but this has not been definitely settled yet. On Friday and Sunday afternoons, when she was thrown open for public inspection, her decks were thronged with visitors. She presented a pleasant spectacle, with every rope and block in its place, every bit of metal about her bright and clean, and everything showing that scrupulous neatness which is so characteristic of the British warship. The Riujio looks indeed more like an English vessel than one belonging to a nation like the Japanese, which until recently had kept itself jealously apart from the rest of the world for many centuries. The uniform dress is copied from the British navy, the discipline is the same, and whenever an article not peculiarly Japanese has to be spoken of, its English name is used. Between decks the men mess together as English sailors do; but in their hours of leisure their national tastes and habits show themselves. Then they break into groups, some to study English, or to write letters in queer Japanese characters; some to listen to a story or ballad recited by one of their number; some to patch and mend their clothes; and some to squat in a circle round a big spittoon and smoke fragrant Japanese tobacco from pipes with bowls like a little girl's brass thimble. Saturday afternoon was a holiday, and in this way did most of the men enjoy it. The Riujio carries, in addition to her officers and crew, thirty-five sea cadets, appointed after they had spent four years in training at a college in Tokio, and passed a competitive examination. Officers, cadets, and seamen have been on leave in Sydney, and it speaks well for Japanese character that not a single case of drunkenness has cropped up, nor has there been any of that disorderly horseplay which with Europeans is so frequently indulged in by Jack ashore.

HIS Honor the Chief Commissioner of Insolvent Estates has been granted twelve months' leave of absence. Mr. Deffell's term of official service has extended over a period of twenty-five years, his Honor having occupied the position of Master in Equity for nine years, and the Commissionership in Insolvency for sixteen years.

THERE can be but little doubt that the drought has broken up with the autumnal equinox. During the last few days there have been a number of heavy showers, and on Saturday morning a steady downpour lasted for some hours, while during the day showers fell at intervals which settled into a persistent rain in the evening. The rains have been much to the satisfaction of everybody, as it is hoped that they will allay all fears of a water famine for the present season, although as the sand hills at Botany have been so thoroughly drained, it is only reasonable to suppose that they will absorb a very considerable quantity of water before any increase is visible in the dams. Yesterday the weather was fine and moderately warm with a clear sky.

THE fourth annual picnic of the produce merchants employees was held at Clontarf on Thursday. The steamer Coraki, kindly given for the day by the C. and R. R. S. N. Co., made two trips from the company's wharf, conveying about two hundred and fifty to the grounds. On arrival of the first steamer a large number proceeded to the pavilion, where dancing was entered into, to the strains of the Young Australian Band. Wickets were then pitched, and a cricket match played between employees of butter merchants and employees of corn merchants. The former won easily, scoring 68 to their opponents 28. About 2 o'clock the company sat down to a first-class spread, provided by the City Catering Company. After full justice had been done to the good things provided, the chairman (Mr. J. See, M.L.A.) proposed the toast of the Queen, which was duly honoured. The vice-chairman, Mr. O. Jeffrey, followed with "Our Employers," which was responded to by the chairman and Messrs. W. F. Martin, M.L.A., H. Prescott, sen., and Alexander Brown. The chairman then proposed "Our Employees," which was responded to by Mr. O. Jeffrey. Mr. J. B. Aird proposed the "Steam Companies, coupled with the name of Mr. J. White, secretary of the C. and R. R. S. N. Co.," to which Mr. R. Keddie responded, and apologised for the unavoidable absence of Mr. White. "The Ladies," proposed by Mr. Martin, and responded to by Mr. Leigh, completed the programme, and, after cheers for the chairman, the company dispersed, some to resume dancing, others for cricket, rounders, &c. A short programme of foot races was gone through, prizes being awarded to the winners. About 6 o'clock the steamer left for home, everybody having spent a most enjoyable day.

ON Wednesday last the employees of Messrs. Plummer and Owen presented Mr. Plummer, the senior member of the firm, who is about to leave for a trip to England by the Orient, with an illuminated address, most artistically executed and handsomely framed, as a token of their esteem, and conveying the assurance that he was looked upon by them not as a mere employer, but as a stanch friend. Mr. Plummer made a suitable acknowledgment. On Saturday, the firm mentioned gave the employes their usual annual entertainment, which on this occasion took the form of a champagne luncheon at Highclere, the residence of Mr. Plummer, at Burwood. Compagnoni prepared a capital spread, and the company, including a few friends, having done full justice to it, several toasts were proposed, and advantage was taken of the occasion to wish Mr. Plummer a pleasant voyage, and safe return. The company then adjourned, and elevens having been picked, a well-contested cricket match brought the day's very pleasant proceedings to a close.

THE following cases, amongst others, were treated at the Infirmary yesterday:—Thomas Foley, aged 50, and residing at Bourke-street, Surry Hills, rheumatism in several joints, and scarcely able to walk; he was found lying in a building in Harris-street, Ultimo, by constable Carroll. Two other persons were admitted to the Infirmary suffering from the effects of drunkenness.

WE learn from the Auckland papers that a proposal to equip another expedition to New Guinea is receiving attention in New Zealand. Mr. R. Mills, who accompanied the expedition which left Wellington some two years ago, and which visited Astrolabe Gulf, is one of the moving spirits. It is decided that some 2000 men should invest £200 a-piece to colonize the island and develop trade with the natives. Mr. Mills expects that the expedition will leave New Zealand about August next.

HIS Honor the Chief Justice has appointed Mr. Edward Marriott, Clerk of Petty Sessions at Uralla, a Commissioner of the Supreme Court of New South Wales for taking affidavits, &c.

THE REVENUE OF VICTORIA.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.]

TURKEY AND GREECE.

ATHENS, APRIL 2.

The Government has now replied to the final offer of Turkey in regard to the rectification of the frontier, and, despite the good offices of Foreign Ministers, has declined to accept the basis laid down unless further concessions are made by the Porte. Whilst waiving the demand for a large cession of territory in the Epirus, it insists on the transfer by Turkey of the town and district of Proveza, a fortified place at the northern entrance of the Gulf of Arta, south of Corfu. The reply of the Porte is anxiously awaited. It is understood that, in the event of a favourable answer being given, the Greek Government will be willing to accept the latest Turkish proposals.

SOUTH AFRICAN AFFAIRS.

LONDON, APRIL 1.

In the House of Commons to-night the Right Hon. H. C. E. Childers, Secretary for War, in replying to a question, announced that the Government were fully alive to the necessity of maintaining a large number of troops in South Africa, and stated that they intended to keep for some time to come a force of not less than 12,000 men of all arms in the province of Natal and at various points in the Transvaal, in accordance with the rights conferred by the treaty of peace recently concluded with the Boers.

TERRORISM BY THE BOERS.

NATAL, APRIL 1.

Authentic accounts received from the Transvaal state that despite the conclusion of peace, the Boers are exercising a complete terrorism over those who during the recent war remained loyal to the British régime. A strong protest has been made by Sir Evelyn Wood against the conduct of the Boers, which is in contravention of the understanding previously arrived at.

EARL OF BEACONSFIELD'S ILLNESS.

LONDON, APRIL 1 (NOON).

A bulletin was issued this morning, stating that the Earl of Beaconsfield is perceptibly weaker, but otherwise the Earl's general condition is improved.

APRIL 2.

The latest bulletin regarding the illness of the Earl of Beaconsfield states that the weakness previously reported continues, and the general condition of the patient is unaltered. His Lordship during the past twenty-four hours slept occasionally, and the acute spasms from which he at first suffered have subsided.

LONDON, APRIL 2.

Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, having failed in his appeal against the recent decision of the Law Courts in the action brought against him, for illegally sitting in the House of Commons, resigned his seat to-day, and has now issued an address to the electors of Northampton, soliciting re-election at their hands.

An important meeting of the trustees of the Newcastle General Cemetery was held in the Council-chambers yesterday, the clergymen of all denominations, as well as laymen, being present. It was decided to make an application for the unexpended vote now in the hands of the Government in order to complete the fencing of the ground, and also to apply to the Government for an additional £500 for clearing and stumping the land. It is high time this was done, intramural burials being a disgusting nuisance owing to the overcrowded state of the Newcastle burial grounds.

Heavy rain fell for two hours up to midnight yesterday. The weather has now cleared up, and is cold but fine.

During March nearly 40,000 letters, newspapers, &c., were posted at the Grafton Post-office.

During the first three months of this year no less than 12,000 packages of general merchandise were forwarded to fourteen New England townships from Grafton, by M'Kithrick's shipping agency alone, weighing nearly 450 tons, showing an increase of 140 tons over the same period of last year. The down trade for the same period amounted to 3697 ingots and bags of tin, 709 bales of wool, and nearly 500 packages of tallow, hides, &c. This is the New England traffic by Nipper and See's line of steamers only, and the figures are taken from official and thoroughly authentic returns. That by the C. and R. Co.'s steamers is equally extensive. Four-fifths of this traffic are by the Glen Innes line.

A warder is coming from Noumea to identify the men. Two are apparently very intelligent.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA v. VICTORIA.

[By Telegraph.]
(From our own Correspondent.)

ADELAIDE, Saturday.

The match between the representatives of South Australia and Victoria, which was begun on the Oval yesterday, was continued to-day. The local team resumed their innings, and brought their total from 42 for one wicket to 163 before the ninth wicket fell. They then left the ground, giving place to the visitors, Jarvis, the eleventh man, being unable to take his place at the wickets, owing to illness. As this would have been virtually his first appearance since the disbandment of the Australian team great disappointment was felt, for it was hoped he would score largely. Noel and W. Slight were the highest scorers, with 52 and 31 to their credit respectively, Knill coming next with a score of 26. The second innings of the Victorians was then begun, Terry and Boyle being the first representatives. The former was bowled by Giffen before he scored, and Trapp joined Boyle. These two added 23 and 19 to the total, but were disposed by Hide, who clean bowled Boyle, and had Trapp caught in the outfield. When time was called M'Shane was not out with 27 to his credit, the total being 71 for three wickets. Subjoined are the scores:—

Stephen, Laurence, and Jaques v. Allen and Allen.—The return match between an eleven from the office of Messrs. Stephen, Laurence, and Jaques, and a team from Messrs. Allen and Allen's office, took place on the Stanmore Ground, on Wednesday last, and resulted in a win for Stephen, Laurence, and Jaques's men by 8 wickets. Allen and Allen's representatives went first to the crease, to the bowling of Tange and Bird, but were soon disposed of for a total of 34, out of which Mr. R. Allen contributed 32. The Pitt-street men then took the willow, and with Saunders 21, put together 78 runs. In the second innings, the Allenites totted up 59, leaving their opponents 16 to win, which they obtained with the loss of 2 wickets. The teams were captained by Messrs. R. Allen and A. G. Thomas respectively, and at the close of the match, cheers were given for the vanquished men by the victors.

TORPEDO RIFLE CLUB.

The monthly prize shooting of the Torpedo Rifle Club was held on Saturday, the 2nd, the following being the principal scores—7 shots at 500 and 600 yards:—

	Actual Score.	Handicap.	Total.
Corporal Hammond, 1st prize	60	4	64
Private Clay, 2nd prize	49	7	56

Private Hedges	39	10	49

After the prize-shooting a sweepstakes was competed for amongst the members, the conditions being 5 shots each at 600 yards; and was won by Captain Walker with 22 out of a possible 25. Private Hedges tied with this score, but was beaten in shooting off.

THE INTERCOLONIAL EIGHT-OAR RACE.

The strong southerly wind which prevailed throughout Saturday gave the Victorian oarsmen an opportunity of testing the rough-water qualities of their outrigger. They rowed hard over the champion course in the morning, and in order that those who visited the river in the afternoon might have an opportunity of witnessing the practice Mr. Upwood took his men out again, and did a smart journey from the mile point to the S. R. C. Boathouse. The crew rowed a neat likely stroke, and on the whole their form and style was very much admired. Later on, when the high wind had gone down, the Sydney men did a short row only, and made three or four formal starts. The rowing was less satisfactory than some of the previous trials, owing, it was said, to the oars, which were new.

On Wednesday last Mr. W. Small, of Swan Creek, Clarence district, suffered heavy loss by the death of his imported draught stallion, Royal Lincoln, from strangles.

Our Newcastle correspondent telegraphed on Saturday:—"The £100 a-side sparring match at the Victoria Theatre last night between Professor West and Young Dutchey was a complete fiasco. After a few rounds, West suddenly disappeared down a trapdoor of the stage, and was not seen again. The theatre was densely crowded, and a wild scene of groaning and confusion followed. The pay office was rushed by the excited mob, who demanded the return of their money."

The race gates for the Hawkesbury meeting were sold on Saturday, and realised the handsome sum of £264. Racehorses are arriving at Richmond daily, and the course is in splendid order.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE AUSTRIAN BAND.

A concert was given on Saturday night in the Masonic Hall in which the greater number of the Austrian Band members took part. The first performance of the band proved the unsuitability of the hall for the music by the full band; and this fact, together with the heavy rain falling when visitors would have been starting for the concert, combined to make the attendance extremely small. The full orchestral numbers could not be heard properly, and the clang of the brass instruments made the music oppressive rather than pleasing. The solo pieces, of which there were five, were most enjoyable; the first a concerto for the clarionet composed by the player, Herr Kotraschek, is effective for the solo instrument and was very well played; the tutti parts are agreeably written and not too heavily scored. The concerto was warmly received, and the solo player and composer specially complimented by one of the audience, who stepped to the platform to shake hands with and congratulate the performer. Throughout the evening the same gentleman was most demonstrative in his applause; his programme waved above his head, and the frequent "bravo" constantly evinced his satisfaction to the amusement of his neighbours. The second solo was the fine air from "Czar und Zimmermann," which Herr Wladika's euphonia or trombone made so effective in the Garden Palace; with the orchestra in the Masonic Hall it was necessarily rather noisy. Herr Wilcek in the second part gave a poetic interpretation of Wagner's "Romance to the Evening Star," the full broad tone of the 'cello suited the music admirably. Herr Kuhr followed with a brilliant fantasia on the French horn, and to this succeeded the "Ave Maria," Schubert, arranged as a duo for 'cello and harp, most beautifully rendered by Herren Patek and Saxperger, which was received with equal favour for its own merits and the artistic interpretation; a portion was repeated. Herr Braun's popular arrangement of the German and Austrian melodies, and the "Beautiful Blue Danube" waltz were greatly appreciated. So good a programme so well performed deserved to be largely supported.

QUEEN'S THEATRE.

The performance at the Queen's Theatre on Saturday night was for the benefit of Mr. J. R. Greville, and notwithstanding the unfavourable state of the weather, the auditorium was crowded in every part, the stalls and pit not having even standing room vacant. The performance began with the well-known Hibernian comedy "His Last Legs," in which Mr. Greville created much amusement as O'Callaghan. He was ably supported by Mr. Leston as Charles Rivers, and Mr. Palmer as Mr. Rivers, sen. The other characters, which are all of an unimportant character, were well taken, and the piece passed off without a hitch, although several of the players considered themselves at liberty to "gag" considerably. All, however, appeared to enter into the genuine fun of the piece, and there was occasionally some smart repartee indulged in which would have done credit to the author of the play. Between this and the burlesque of "Cinderella" there was some very good dancing by the Misses Sherwood and Perman and Master Perman, as well as the great ship scene from "Ship Ahoy." The burlesque evoked roars of laughter from young and old, and passed off most successfully, Miss Kate Foley, Mr. Greville, and Mr. Lenton being the heroes of the occasion. To-night Miss Marion Melrose, who recently concluded such a successful season at the Gaiety with Mr. Marshall, will take a benefit, and we have no doubt that a bumper-house will greet this favourite actress.

A new service of sacred song and reading, entitled "Lost and Found," musically re-arranged by Mr. F. J. Ironside, is announced to be given this evening at SS. Simon and Jude's Church, Surry Hills, in aid of the Sunday School, for which a collection will be made, the admission being free.

NEW MUSIC.

We have received from Signor Lardelli, a young musician recently arrived in the colony with the object of pursuing the practice of his profession here, three pieces of music composed by him. I. Romance in A flat major, a short phrase prettily treated, change of key and subject, a recurrence to the original, make a sympathetic little salon piece. II. "Estelle," Valse de Concert, in E flat major, is in three divisions, the second the most original. III. "Rosa Bianca" Valsa Sympalica, in D flat major, is melodious and effective. All show the composer to be a capable writer, and one familiar with the requirements of pianoforte music, endowed with sufficient creative power to produce agreeable music, and with the knowledge to express those ideas correctly. The tendency to frequent modulations, and the keys in which the compositions are written give them an appearance of difficulty greater than they really possess.

"The Belles of Melbourne," Valse de Salon, by Henri Kowalski, has been sent to us by the publishers, Messrs. W. H. Glen and Co., Melbourne, through their Sydney agent, Mr. L. Moss, Hunter-street. It is printed in the good style usual with C. Troedel and Co., and will compare most favourably with any English publication. The waltz was frequently heard at the composer's concerts in the Gaiety; it is a pleasing and effective jeu d'esprit, in E flat major, with a middle movement in A flat major, and is dedicated to the clever little pianiste, Miss Ada Willetts, whose performances have more than once received high praise from the Melbourne Press.

ART AWARDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—It was not my intention to have troubled you any further respecting the art awards at the Melbourne Exhibition, had not Mr. Du Faur's letter, which appears in this morning's Herald, called for a brief reply.

The errors he points out "all in a row," which arose through a misprint, have, as he has probably seen, been corrected in your issue of yesterday.

Fear of encroaching too much upon your valuable space caused me to confine myself to a few extracts only from the list of awards published in the Argus; but assuming Mr. Du Faur's estimate, that a Melbourne first equals a Sydney extra first, to be correct, then a still greater discrepancy of opinion is made evident in the case of other awards; notably in that of Perugini's "Modern Bacchante" which in Melbourne received a first order of merit, while in Sydney it was simply mentioned.

I have purposely omitted reference to colonial works of art; several of which were awarded extra first and first honors in this colony, but which, like the "nineteen others works" (some of the latter by the most eminent men of the day) met with no recognition at the hands of the Melbourne art judges.

It will therefore be evident to every impartial reader, that the marked difference of opinion to which I drew attention still remains, Mr. Du Faur's ingenious letter notwithstanding.

Yours, &c.,
ART LOVER.

WIDENING OF OXFORD-STREET.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—This bold proposal is an attempt made by shopkeepers on one side of a street to benefit themselves at the expense of their neighbours and the Government of New South Wales. If the tram traffic is too much for the street, let some of it be diverted into other streets (and there are half-a-dozen routes which could be suggested), to relieve the traffic in Oxford-street. The owners of the property on the Woolloomooloo side of Oxford-street, which is the side their opposite neighbours so kindly suggest should be pulled down, are not inclined to part with their property, as they would not be adequately compensated for the loss of it. But if it should be entertained it would be curious to inquire what amount of money the owners of the Surry Hills side of Oxford-street would contribute towards this object, as their property would be greatly increased in value, and how much their tenants will contribute for a complete monopoly of the business of this great thoroughfare.

April 1. SUUM CUIQUE.

Dr. de Jongh's Light-brown Cod Liver Oil.—Preeminently the Cod Liver Oil for use in India and in Australia. Joseph J. Pope, Esq., late Staff-surgeon, Army, writes:—"I found during my Indian experience that the worth and character of Dr. de Jongh's Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil remained unchanged by tropical heat or foreign climate, and it was, from its uniformity of character, particularly adapted for long-continued administration. The Oil of Dr. de Jongh places in everyone's reach a reliable and valuable remedy one that cannot be too widely recognised. SYDNEY FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

The following report from the Trustees of the Free Public Library to the Minister of Public Instruction has been laid before Parliament:—

"Sydney, 11th March, 1881.

"Sir,—In accordance with the official intimation contained in the letter of the Under Secretary of Justice, of date 10th June last, that this institution had 'been placed under the Ministerial control and direction of the Minister of Public Instruction,' I have the honour to transmit to you the tenth annual report of the trustees for 1880-81.

"It will be seen by a reference to one of the returns attached to this report, that the number of visitors to the library is, though far in excess of any year up to 1879, considerably less than that of the latter. This is easily accounted for by the great influx of visitors to the Exhibition during 1879. It is a matter, however, for congratulation that the visits to both departments of the library reached the number of 131,462. It is also a proof of the increasing usefulness of the institution, and of the growing interest of the public in its existence that though, owing to the exceptional cause to which attention has been drawn, there was a diminution in the numbers visiting the reference library, the number of volumes issued from the lending branch has increased by 9158 during the twelve months, the total of the issues for the year reaching 37,251 volumes. A reference to the return (Appendix C) which furnishes a synopsis of the classification of reading of borrowers from the lending branch will show that the library has been used to a large extent by those who may be reasonably presumed to be seekers of valuable information, and not merely persons who are only desirous of intellectual recreation.

"A glance at these figures will suffice to satisfy any one who has any knowledge of the accommodation for the conduct of the business of this important branch of the institution of the utter inadequacy of existing arrangements for that purpose. The space is wholly insufficient, is imperfectly lighted and defectively ventilated; and the trustees regret to be obliged to state that the convenience of the public has only been met by impairing the health of the officers of the institution, whose work has to be carried on by day and by night with gaslight. The original recommendation of this place by the trustees in 1877 was simply as a temporary expedient, at a time when it was uncertain whether the institution of the Lending Branch would prove acceptable to the public, and when the estimate formed of the department was that the number of volumes on the shelves would not exceed 2000, and that the issues would fall short of 5000 volumes a year. The stock of the library now exceeds 12,000, and the issues 37,000 volumes. It has long become absolutely necessary that this branch should be removed to a more convenient building, and with this object the trustees addressed you on the 15th of May and the 13th of December last.

"In order to provide room for new books received for issue from the branch the trustees have been compelled to direct that nearly 4000 volumes of the English Patents (which are kept in leather-backed vasculums) should be taken off the shelves and piled in rows round the board-room. The inconvenience of such an expedient is obvious. It multiplies the difficulties of the officers in the selection of the volumes as they may be required, and leads to confusion and embarrassment in the conduct of the business of the library.

"It is also the duty of the trustees to point out that the accommodation of the reference library is wholly unequal to the necessities of the visitors, many of whom have frequently no place either to sit or to stand in, whilst the overcrowded state of the room effectually prevents the prosecution of their labours by students, who should be free from constant interruptions.

"On the 25th July last a deputation of the trustees waited on you with the view of urging that some action should be taken to prevent the lapsing of a vote of £150,000, passed by the Appropriation Act of 1879, for the purpose of erecting a new public library, and they are gratified to find that in answer to their request steps have already been taken to secure land for this purpose. Although the land which has been resumed under the Act (44 Victoria No. 16, of 12th July, 1880) is not one of the blocks named in the report of the trustees for last year, it was taken into consideration by them when the matter was before the Board, and was not specifically mentioned because it was considered that the cost of obtaining it would be beyond the sum placed at the disposal of the Executive.

"After the trustees had waited upon you on the 23rd July with reference to the site for the new building they invited, with your consent, the Colonial Architect to an interview for the purpose of consulting him upon the design and details of the plan for the new structure, which had at that date been prepared by him. After a careful examination of these plans, the trustees found it would be essential, in order to provide all the accommodation for the requisite storage of books, to make very material alterations in the working drawings; and on looking into the matter Mr. Barnet thought it would be more satisfactory for him to make an entirely new design and to prepare fresh working plans, which he undertook to do. These new plans have not yet been submitted to the trustees, but the librarian, at Mr. Barnet's request, was instructed to furnish him in writing with the views of the trustees on the new design, and also the amount of accommodation they thought necessary, as well as a detailed statement of every requirement that ought to be taken into consideration when framing the design and drawing the plan. All this has been done.

"From the 1st to the 19th June, the reference library was closed for cleaning and stock-taking, but a careful examination of the books did not disclose any further losses than the records of the daily system of checking the presses had given, which were three volumes stolen and two mutilated, and these were books of no great value. It is, however, deeply to be regretted that such petty thefts as these are carried on, although every care is taken by the officers of the institution to prevent the books being stolen or destroyed, and the annual losses are trifling as compared with the loss and damages detailed in the reports of kindred institutions. The number of volumes lost from the lending branch is however, much greater than on any previous year, the number of missing volumes being 58, which is owing principally to borrowers giving wrong addresses, or leaving the colony and forgetting to return their books. The tickets of all the delinquents have been cancelled, and the trustees have determined to prosecute any persons found detaining any of the missing volumes, and as a check in future it has been found necessary to compel each borrower to give the address whenever a book is taken out; and with some other restrictions which have been adopted, it is thought that the losses next year will be very much less.

"During the time the library was closed for cleaning, the trustees caused some alterations to be made in the arrangements of the presses, so as to give a little more shelf-room for placing books which had for some time been lying in the cases; and they at the same time took the opportunity of directing the removal of the whole of the works of prose fiction that were in the reference library (1538 volumes) to the lending branch, as by the adoption of this course space was obtained for keeping on the shelves books of greater value, and it was thought readers would be more pleased to get the use of the works of fiction for perusal at home.

"Additional assistance having been provided by Parliament, the hours for issuing books from the lending branch have been extended, and books are now issued from 10 o'clock a.m. to 9 o'clock p.m. on week days, and from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock p.m. on Sundays.

"The alteration has been found, to the great gratification of the trustees, to be of value to many of the working classes, who were unable, under the former regulations, to avail themselves to any large extent of the advantages offered by the establishment of the branch.

"In the month of August the trustees received through your department copies of correspondence which had taken place between the Agent-General for the colony in London, the Commissioners for Patent Specifications, and the Government of this colony, respecting some missing indexes to the patent specifications which were not received with the patents when they were delivered here as a present from the Commissioners. It appears from this correspondence that the missing indexes were sent from the Commissioners to the Agent-General's department in London, but in some manner have gone astray, and cannot now be traced; but the Commissioners very generously offered to supply duplicates of these deficiencies, and a portion of them have already arrived. The trustees are greatly indebted to the Commissioners for this generous offer to replace the lost indexes, as the patents, as now received without them, are almost useless, because it would probably take several weeks to find any particular patent unless the seeker should happen to know the exact date upon which it was issued.

"The supplementary catalogue and index for the reference Library for the years 1877 and 1878, as mentioned in the trustees' last report, was completed on the 30th September last, and a new and carefully compiled catalogue of all the books in the lending branch is now ready for sale to the public.

"A complete list of the books, &c., which have been presented during the year to the library will be found in appendix G, and the trustees have conveyed their thanks to the various donors. Among these donations will be found some very valuable works included in the list.

"Only 16 volumes have been received under the Copyright Act, which must necessarily represent but a small portion of the works issued by the publishers of this colony. In their last report the trustees invited attention to the non-fulfilment of the Act, and they again beg to suggest that some arrangements should be made by the Registrar for compelling publishers to send copies of their works.

"During the year the stock of the library has been increased by 4283 volumes, of which 3704 were placed in the reference library, and 609 in the lending branch. The total number of days that the reference library was open (including Sundays) was 338; and the total number of days that the lending branch was open (including Sundays) was 319. The average number of volumes used on Sunday (during the hours 2 to 6 p.m.) was—reference library, 154; lending library, 27: total, 181. The average number of volumes used on week days was—reference library, 532; lending branch, 120: total, 652.

"In the appendix will be found under A. return of the number of volumes in the library. B. Summary of visits to the library from 1860 to 1880. C. Return of the class of books borrowed from the lending branch. D. Return of the class of books read, the number of volumes used, and the number of visits to the libraries on Sundays for the year. E. A list of the officers. F. List of books missing from the lending branch, &c. G. List of donations for the year.

"The trustees have, in presenting this gratifying statement of the satisfactory condition of this important institution, no reason to doubt that an early provision for widening its influence and enlarging its usefulness will be regarded by their fellow-colonists as a great national benefit.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,
"Your most obedient servant,
"Charles Badham, Chairman."

EXPORTS OF MEAT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—There is no doubt whatever that fortune is within the grasp of every stockowner in the colony, large and small, if we could once establish a meat trade with Europe. Beef and mutton here are worth a penny per lb., and in London sixpence, and it has been proved time after time that the distance dividing us is no obstacle, but that meat grown in Australia can be consumed fresh in London.

The trade in fresh meat has up to the present time been monopolised by America, bringing a return of millions yearly to that country. Some desultory efforts have been made here, but so far with very little result.

The whole colony would vastly benefit; but, as the squatters would first reap the golden harvest, I beg to propose that the following plan be tried:—The stock and station agents combine, and each apply to his constituents explaining in as forcible a manner as possible the loss they sustain on the sale of every mob of cattle and sheep sent to market, and ask each to put his name down for £500, with which to start a company to work into this immense and profitable trade; the money to be drawn as required.

The directors and managers being chosen, and having funds, or the promise of funds in hand, the trade will soon be developed, and there is no doubt our money will be more than returned to us by the rise in stock, even if the enterprise should eventually turn out unprofitable, of which there is hardly the remotest chance.

I hope and trust the stock and station agents will work together in the way I propose, and that this matter may be gone into in a cordial and zealous manner, and I beg to have my name entered for £500.

I am, &c.,
A. W. BUCKNELL.

BOROUGH COUNCIL.

Redfern.—The usual meeting was held on 11th instant. Present—The Mayor, with Aldermen Wright, Andrew, Williamson, Farr, O'Connell, Bogie, and M'Lachlan. Minutes of previous meeting read and confirmed. The chairman of the finance committee brought up a report recommending payment of accounts amounting to £474 1s. 7d., which on the motion of Alderman O'Connell and M'Lachlan, was adopted, and payment duly authorized. A report of the improvement committee was submitted and considered, and on the motion of Aldermen Williamson and Andrew. Confirmed. Correspondence was read: From the Australian Gaslight Company, consenting to lay down a drain in Louis-street, on the understanding that at least one public light be supplied from it on its being completed. From Mr. A. R. Fremlin, M.L.A., in reply to renewed application for foot bridge over Holden-street, and enclosing letter from the Works Department stating that the matter has received further consideration, and that it has been decided that a bridge cannot be erected at the place indicated; also, informing the Council in reply to request about incorporating the land between the present western boundary and the Old Newtown Road, that the Darlington Council had petitioned for the same privilege, and recommending a numerously signed counter petition to be forwarded. From the secretary water supply committee, requesting the pamphlets forwarded by post be distributed among those interested. These letters were received. From P. Sutton, requesting permission to lay down a 6-inch pipe in place of the wooden bridge at the entrance of his stables in Stanley-street. From A. G. Neate, requesting that kerbing and guttering be laid opposite Wolfenden's property on the south side of Wells-street. Referred to the improvement committee for consideration and report. From David Anderson, requesting permission to erect a temporary bridge in Regent-street. Moved by Alderman Williamson,—"That permission be granted on the usual conditions." Seconded by Alderman Andrew, and carried. From F. E. Pettinger, secretary Redfern Fire Brigade, asking permission to advertise their annual picnic under the patronage of the Mayor and aldermen. Granted, on the motion of Aldermen Williamson and Farr. The Mayor moved,—"That the kerb and gutter on the east side of Bourke-street, from Thurlow-street to end of Thurlow-terrace, be lifted, relaid, &c., at a probable cost of £10." Seconded by Alderman O'Connell, and carried. Alderman Farr moved: 1. "That the guttering on the south side of Cleveland-street, from Bullanaming to Castlereagh streets, be taken up, relaid, &c., at a cost of £40." Seconded by Alderman Wright, and carried. 2. "That the drain be relaid in place of the present crossing from Burnett-street into Wells-street; also, that the gutter stones be taken up and relaid, &c., from Pitt-street, eastwards, as far as may be required, at a cost not exceeding £20." Seconded by Alderman Wright, and carried. Alderman Williamson moved: 1. "That the east side of Hugo-street, from Vine-street to where left off, be kerbed and guttered, at a cost not exceeding 9s. per yard. 2. That 200 tons of metal be laid on Hugo-street, from Vine-street to Caroline-street." Seconded by Alderman Andrew, and carried. The notice of motion standing in the name of Alderman Bogie, with reference to erecting and covering in awnings, was ruled out of order by the Mayor. Alderman Bogie drew attention to the circular received from the Mayor of Ashfield, inviting delegates to a meeting at the Town-hall, with reference to the water supply, and moved,—"That the whole Council represent the borough at that meeting." Seconded by Alderman Williamson and carried. Alderman Bogie further drew attention to the open drain passing through M'Culloch's land in Cleveland-street, and to the accident resulting therefrom, and requested the Mayor to endeavour to have the same secured against similar accidents. The Mayor stated, in reply, that he would attend to the matter.—W. N. Parker, Council-clerk.

HORSE MARKET.

Messrs. William Inglis and Co.—An unusually large supply of horses arrived the past week, the bulk of which passed through our hands, and notwithstanding the glutted state of the market really good horses sold well, and brought topping prices. We sold, between the Bazaar and Camperdown Yards, close on 200 head. The prices actually realized this week for horses were as follows:—Saddle and harness, from £10 to £25, in this class nothing very superior arrived; lighter descriptions, £5 to £10; very light, £1 to £5. Very heavy draught sold from £25 to £42 10s; nuggety cart horses, from £15 to £25; and spring-cart horses, from £5 to £14. Through the week we sold a large number of vehicles, which we will give in our next.—March 31.

Mr. George Kiss.—The market has been very liberally supplied the past week, both at the Bazaar and Camperdown—in fact, so many horses have not been sold during a week for a long period; but notwithstanding the droves that have been presented for public competition, there have never been too many good light or heavy horses amongst them. The demand may appear to be slack to casual spectators, but horses worth having in nine cases out of 10 realize their value, as can be seen by the results shown. The following are the prices obtained at the Bazaar:—Heavy draught, from £20 to £30; medium draught, from £10 to £20; light harness horses, from £10 to £31 10s; harness pairs to £50; ponies, from £5 to £16; spring-cart turnouts, from £12 to £31; second-hand buggies to £17 10s; buggy harness, from £2 to £10; spring-carts, from £5 to £13; cows, from £1 2s 6d to £7 10s; and usual quantity of weeds and town screws at prices according to quality. At Camperdown I sold on account of Mr James Osborne a small lot of light horses from 10s to £11 10s, and on account of Mr. M'Allister 40 head of heavy and light horses, prices of which were not to hand in time for this week's issue.—March 31.

Mr. T. Cosgrove.—The past week opened with a good supply of country horses, besides the usual number of town lots which find their way to the bazaar from various parts of the city. The market remains very firm for all kinds of stout working horses. Heavy draughts sell exceptionally well, as also stylish buggy and carriage pairs, the latter class of animal being scarce. Light horses are very plentiful, and sell at low figures. Milch cows of good quality are in fair demand; highest price since last quotation, £6 10s; inferior and store cows, from 15s to £4 5s; stylish buggy horses sold from £24 10s to £30, heavy draught from £25 to £40, and nuggetty dray horses from £17 10s to £25; useful saddle and harness horses from £12 10s to £12; lighter descriptions, for saddle and harness purposes, from £7 to £10 10s; and very light from £1 to £3. There was a steady business done in all kinds of vehicles; new and second-hand sold at about last week's quotations.

A VISIT TO SOME VILLAGES IN NEW GUINEA.

The following extracts are from the journal of the Rev. J. Chalmers, which has been furnished to us by the Rev. J. Sunderland:—

"I started to visit Doura, a district near the base of Mount Owen Stanley, but on arriving at Manumanu, in Redscar Bay, I was informed that the day before a party of coast natives had gone up the river and surprised the nearest village, killing twenty, and taking away everything they could carry. It would be useless for us to go then, as the natives of the other villages would have fled to the mountains and would not return for some time; so I determined we should visit Naara, the district around Cape Suckling. East of Cape Suckling a few miles there is a small saltwater creek, in which we left our boat, and walked to the village of Tobokau, 10 miles inland. The country is very swampy near the coast, but between the swamp and the hills is very fine, level country. The village is on one of the ridges, 150 feet above sea level, with low, thick scrub all round; for that part of New Guinea it is a large village. Houses belonging to one family adjoin, with one verandah covered over. A man with more wives than one has for each wife a separate house. Food, children, house duties, planting, &c., all are distinct. Sometimes the wives are very friendly, and assist one another in planting and cooking, but more generally the opposite, and then the poor husband wishes their houses were in different villages, instead of being close by one another, with one verandah. A native asked me if I knew he once had two wives, and on my replying I was not aware of it, he said, 'Yes, I had two wives, but they nearly broke my heart. It was a continuous quarrel, so I sent one about her business, telling her she must never appear again in my house. Lately she sent to me for a little tobacco, and to know if I would have her back. I gave no tobacco, and to have her back I know better than that.' They were having a grand feast when we entered the village. Some were dancing, others were cutting up pigs, so that we were right in the village before they noticed us. On seeing us the men rushed for arms, women and children climbed on to the verandahs quicker than they generally do. On knowing who we were, arms were put down and a crowd gathered round. Some were all over blood from pig-cutting, others were dressed regardless of expense. There were head dresses of many shapes, and a few had hats seven feet high, wooden frame, one mass of feathers and plumes. Some had large pieces of native cloth, beautifully marked, like tartan; from others, long streamers, made from the pandanus leaf, hung from the neck, arms, and legs, and nearly all had necklaces, armlets, and anklets made of shells. All their wealth of jewellery and clothing they carried on them that day. Having met the chief Naimean at Kabati we settled down with him. His wife No. 1 attended on us. A noisier body I have not met on New Guinea. She began on our arrival, was at it when we left, getting hoarse though. In the evenings, dancing was resumed, and kept up to an early hour. One would think they require the morning light, and heat of a sun 15 degrees high, to go home by, as these dances are seldom over until the sun is well up. Some people think these meetings mere innocent amusement, but it is because they know nothing of natives. Purity is unknown, but then natives have no such morality. There are no moral natives, unless very young children, and even they have their minds stored with filth. I slept in one of the chief's houses, a pig fast alongside of me, and during the night the brute must grunt music, determined to prevent me sleeping. To turn it out would have given mortal offence, and might end in my being turned out in a not very pleasant manner. The following morning the chief presented us with a pig (not the pet pig of the night before), yams, and bananas, and we gave a return present. In the afternoon we returned to the boat, but finding the wind too strong we slept on the beach, and the following day returned to Manumanu, where we spent the Sunday. We had two good services, the people wonderfully attentive. I had hoped to go up the river on the Monday to Doura, but on the Saturday afternoon we heard that another party had gone inland, and no guide would go with us. I hope a teacher will soon be at Tobokau and another at Namoa, west of Cape Suckling, still unvisited, but well reported.

"On the 28th of October, I left Kapakapa, the village near Round Head, where Ioane is teacher; he accompanied me to visit inland in the Tarova district, two of which villages had been visited by Mr. Bewick. The first we came to was Bonotupu, six miles from the coast, 270 feet above sea level, with a population of about 700. One mile and a-half further on is Kanotage, 300 feet above sea level, substantially-built houses same as at Kalo, and a population of about 500. Two miles further is Kidobada, 350 feet above sea level, and with a population of about 500. In this village the women were in charge, all fighting men being out on the war-path in quest of Kalo. The houses are very large, and for native houses well built. Two miles further on is perhaps the largest of the villages, Rabiamaka, 360 feet above sea level, with a population of about 800. North of Bonotupu about one mile and a half, is Papaga 360 feet above sea level, with a population of about 400. We were hurried out of this village with an offensive effluvium from a corpse drying in the sun. At these five villages there are large quantities of food of all kinds, obtained from plantations close by. Their water is got from small running streams in the valleys, and is good. All will willingly receive teachers, and I have no doubt will treat them kindly. A teacher at a village is not only wealth for the village, but it gives the place a great name, which far and wide is repeated in song. About three miles further inland is Gorise, 500 feet above sea level, with a population of about 200. They were having a grand feast and insisted on our remaining to see the opening dance. At the opposite end of the village to us we heard drumming, and soon four girls, beautifully tattooed, came on dancing, followed by thirty men drumming and dancing, and two more girls brought up the rear. The dancing was wild and the drumming noisy. These girls were being publicly introduced into society. They were skilfully dressed with feathers and shells, and short dress petticoats, made for the occasion. It was amusing to see the anxiety of the female relatives to have all pat, and every motion as correct as possible. In the centre of the village they had what I call a gigantic Christmas tree, about 75 feet high and branches in proportion, laden with cocoanuts, betel nuts, bananas, and yams, and numerous pandanus leaf streamers, croton leaves and flowers, all hung about. In front of the houses were collections of food, and every verandah was nicely decorated with flowers, variegated leaves and food. A great many natives, all armed, were in from various districts, and many that we met in our last long tramp came to touch chins. They have plenty of food and good water close by.

"On the 29th I visited Veipuri, inland from Kaile six miles. Along the banks of the Vailala River are some fine plantations and plenty of good land under bush. There are three villages in the district on ridges close by the Astrolabe Range. They seem to have abundance of food and betel nuts. They belong to the Koiari tribe, who generations ago were driven over the Astrolabe by the friends and settled down here. The village we visited is on a ridge, 680 feet above sea level. Close by was a large stream of running water. We were well received and returned laden with taro and betel nuts. We got into the boat at Vailala, called at Tupuselei, and arrived at Port Moresby somewhere near the small hours. The Dourans, we hear, have concluded a peace with Lealea, and the Chief Adu has sent us word to visit him. He says that while he lives he will have no peace with the Koitapuans of Lokurukuna, who attacked him and Manumanu, as it was a man from this place who led the attacking party up the river and showed them the way through the bush; but for his guidance the Koitapuans could not have found the village. At Munikahila, during our teacher Jakoba's visit to the coast, the natives broke into his house, took what suited them, and threw the remainder outside. Hitherto the Koiarians have stolen nothing from any one of us, and it is a pity they should now begin.

"November 9.—After taking Piri on board at Boera, we reached Lealea in the evening. Some years ago a teacher lived here, but was removed. The place is surrounded with swamp, and the people look very miserable. We got the chief's front verandah to sleep on.

"10th.—In very early morning we left Lealea, pulling up a large salt water creek for about five miles, under the guidance of a Koitapuan. Leaving the boat in a clump of mangrove, we travelled for about five miles across a very barren piece of country to the Laloki River, where it is a large stream. Meeting a party of Koitapuans on the way, we enlisted two into our service, who were friendly with Doura natives, and willing to accompany us. Having secured a double canoe we paddled for about 20 miles up the river, which is deep and broad all the way, much more so than at Moumili. We left the river by a large creek that led us into a network of lagoons, and through these to Kevani, a Koitapu village. The lagoons swarmed with wild ducks, and many other kinds of birds, which feasted on the abundance of fish. All up the Laloki and in the creek and lagoons the alligators were very numerous. Beautiful lilies, tinted blue and white adorned the fever-stinking swamp. Paddling, poling, and wading, brought us about 5 o'clock to the village, a miserable locality in very truth. We were given the Dubu—sacred place or platform—to sleep on. It is about twenty feet off the ground, the posts are carved, and on each side have representations of men, women, and alligators, roughly done, and showing very little taste. The people were exceedingly kind, giving us food cooked and uncooked. Shooting ducks on the way up frightened them much, but having heard I was likely to be about soon, some thought they would risk coming down in their double canoe and have a look, others were rushing through the bush with their arms. On seeing us, and learning who we were and what we wanted, they shouted to the village, so that on our landing we were received as friends.

"11th.—Stinking swamps all round, and mosquitos so numerous that even their singing outside of net would prevent sleep. The boards on the sacred place were so uneven that they could not be spoken of as 'very comfortable,' and between them the mosquitoes found me out. It was a most romantic night, that is, a long time after; clear moonlight, beautiful lilies, tropical forests with gigantic trees; sleeping on a platform twenty feet high, with coarsely-carved figures and pig's jaws fastened as guns, on which we hung our things, mosquitos singing outside your net, and rascally ones biting you inside; men, women, and children coughing, and the last, also, crying; and ugly dingoes collected underneath, with evil designs, and howling frightfully. Starting early next morning we travelled westerly through low country, swampy in many parts, with thick low scrub. In the afternoon we came on to the bank of the Brown River. It is about the same in size as the Kemp Welch. A few natives in a canoe poling up the river were very much afraid of us, and it was only after a good deal of palaver we got them to come and ferry us across. Since the attack by the Koitapuans on the lowest down village the natives have left their houses in the other villages, and for the present have gone further up the river. Two natives led us through the bush for about two miles further up the river, where the elder one gave a peculiar call, and soon there was a great noise from the other side, and on coming out on the bank, we could see men arming and women and children running about in great excitement. The native leading us called on me to stand in front close to the stream. All right, friend, and I got in front, when he shouted my name, and laughing, told them to put their arms away. Packed canoes came across, and in one of them the Chief Adu. I had gone into the bush a little way to get out of the sun, having had sufficient for one day, so that Adu on landing wanted to know what had become of me, and on being showed where I was, hurried on, touched my chin and I his, then took me by the hand and hurried me off as if impatient to get across. Adu is a fine-looking fellow, light coloured and tall, with a beard of which he is exceedingly proud. Their present houses are mere lean-overs. At night they cross the river to a sand beach a little way up, carrying with them all their valuable property. They wanted us to accompany them, and so be safe from enemies, but we had done enough for one day, and would chance enemies. We were given three lean-overs and plenty of bananas.

"12th.—Spent to-day visiting with Adu the villages further up the river. The people live very scattered. Adu says from Variveri we can get to the very top of Mount Owen Stanley, where villages are to be found. He has heard it is dreadfully cold up there. If I return he will take me to many villages on the spurs. In each of the villages visited we had presents of cooked food. In the afternoon returned to camp. At one village the people were very much afraid of us, and begged Adu to lead us on.

"13th.—Ready to start before sunrise. No sleep, dingoes and mosquitoes beyond description, not simply useless. Adu anxious to keep us brought a pig, but it would not do, all the pigs in Doura would not keep us. 'Stay to-day with us Tamate.' 'No, I cannot, I must return.' 'But here is a pig, you must eat it or carry it away with you.' He thinks he has me in a corner, he knows we have not carriers for a pig and we must remain to eat it; for whoever left a pig? 'Adu mark that pig as mine, and when I return to visit the places we have been speaking about, that we can have a feast.' 'Are you sure to return?' 'Do you see that mountain and all these ridges and spurs? They are unvisited, and you say there are many villages. I must return if well.' 'I believe you. The pig we shall eat on your return.' Into canoes and off. Adu himself must take me down the river to the path, and would gladly accompany me to see Port Moresby, but I was afraid of his being waylaid, and at present I could not well return to see him home. When parting he said, 'I should like to have gone with you. I can get no young wives here; I might at Boribori.' 'Wait, friend, until I have seen and spoken to the Koitapuans.' He will gladly now make peace in the ordinary way. We parted as old friends—he giving me a parting present, and I gave him one in return. We travelled hard, no resting, and when we got to Kevani all seemed knocked up. Had dinner, and, to the disgust of our guides, into canoes and away for coast, arriving at Lealea some time early in the morning of the new day.

"18th.—Maiva canoes reported on their way here. Our first report was that Lolo natives (same who killed Dr. James and Captain Thorngren) had come down in force to attack Manumanu, and that several canoes from Port Moresby lying there had only women and children in them, the men having gone to Kabati. A canoe was dispatched, soon returning with information that they were traders only for Lealea, and that numbers more were on their way. Hoping to return with them to Maiva, we hurried off to Tupuselei to visit their inland villages. A strong south-easter prevented our arriving before 8 p.m.

"19th. A child having died a few days ago, wailing is still continued. Unfortunately the corpse is not far from the Mission House, and with chanting and drumming so near it was impossible to sleep. All was in a low irritating key, if only in a high noisy one sleep would have been possible. Had early breakfast, then away with guides to Tabunari. Just at the back of coast ridges is an extensive swamp, then good country, well watered, for a few miles; then leaving it we got on to ridges in front of Astrolabe spurs. Tabunari is very much scattered; a house or two on a spur. The people are Kirarians. They were very kind—cooking us food, and giving us presents of spears, food, and betel nuts. The village we were in was 360 feet above sea level, close to a fine stream of beautifully clear water. From there we travelled west to Fasili, 360 feet above sea level, 40 houses, people all Kirari. A teacher could with advantage be placed here, and I do hope to see one there very soon. Returning early to Tupuselei we got into our dingy and returned to port, arriving late.

"23rd. Arrived at Boera on our way to Maiva, having promised our friend Oa, the chief, to visit him before the end of the year. When I met him at the port a few weeks ago he asked me to get Renaki and Rovakura, of Hula, to send a son each to Maiva, that he would receive them and treat them kindly, and after sago season he would visit Hula. The two lads are with us, but they go with fear and trembling. Our boatmen are not sure of this trip, they lack the heartiness of former trips. We have met some Maiva men, who say Oa is very ill; one says he is better. (He was really dead, but they were afraid to tell us.) Piri, a native teacher, who is a great man with the Gulf natives, will accompany us, and in hopes of getting sago will take his own boat. Very little would turn our men home and leave us to go alone.

"24th. Left Boera this morning. In crossing Caution and Redscar Bays we had a strong tide against us, so did not get to Naara coast until dark. The sun was exceedingly hot.

"25th. Slept last night on beach, near Cape Suckling, and by sunrise left for the west. When a few miles beyond the Cape we met three Delena canoes with pottery. It seems that in ancient times the Boera natives were one with this people, and now a great many Boera women are married to Delena natives. They were waiting for the Namoa natives to come down and trade for their pottery with smoked kangaroo. We all landed, and after luncheon a party was arranged to visit Namoa. When about to start, I said, 'I fear it will rain before we can return.' A woman sitting close by said, 'It cannot rain until after we return home to Delena.' 'Why not?' 'The rainmaker is with us, and he alone has power.' 'Where is he?' and she pointed to the chief Kone. 'Kone, my friend, what about the rain?' 'It cannot rain, so do not be afraid.' 'But I think it will rain this afternoon, and I am not sure of going to Namoa until our return from Maiva.' 'You need not fear; so let us start.' They were exceedingly desirous that we should at once start, so off we set a walk of about three miles. When crossing a piece of level country, I said, 'Now, Kone, it will rain.' 'It will not,' and he cried out, 'Rain, stay on the mountains!' I said 'No use Kone, it comes. Rain, come.' We reached Namoa, and the rain has come, and here we are prisoners. Kone only says, 'Do you think I thought you were a man of no power? You are a Lohiabada (great chief) and so am I, but the rain has listened to you.' Kone laughs when I say, 'Come my friend, remember what I have been telling you of the great and good Spirit, and His power.' He is greatly relieved because it is clearing up, and the stars are peeping out. We were led into the great meeting house, and as a mark of friendship were at once presented with betel nuts and cooked food. For the first time in New Guinea, I have met a real chieftess—a perfect Amazon, who rules her husband as well as others. She is about 24 years of age. Her husband is about 26, rather good looking. I have no doubt he can sulk amazingly. The people are all very kind, coming with presents of cooked food and betel nuts. The women altogether are very masculine in appearance. Two young girls are being introduced into society, so there is feasting, and will be dancing during the evening. Both are laden with feathers, shell jewellery, and pigs' tails; they looked pale from long confinement, and were not able to walk well. During the afternoon they were walked up and down the village by two old dames, who preceded them. We have to camp it out here to-night, without blankets, and in damp clothes. A great crowd attended our evening service, and all were very quiet.

"26th.—Had tolerable night, with a crowd of natives to watch us, lest any harm should come to us. Chieftess Koloka, and her husband Boe, must also be in attendance. Dancing began about 7, and continued until 12, when rain dispersed the merry dancers. Our friend Oa is dead, and I fancy my natives are not sure of going on, they are conjuring up all imaginable evils. All our Namoa friends were anxious this morning that we should stay until midday; but anxious to press on we left in the early morning, accompanied to the boats by Koloka, Boe, men, women, and children, four men carrying a pig, and others food, a present to us from Koloka. A great many were carrying smoked kangaroo, and on getting to the coast they traded all away for pottery. They are all sharp traders. Koloka and her husband wish us to call on our return, and they will visit Port Moresby with us. Namoa is a nice village about 350 feet above sea level, with a population of about 300. It would be a fine station, and Koloka and her husband would gladly receive a teacher. Our most western station on the mainland of New Guinea is Boera, 12 miles from Port Moresby, and from it with good wind this place can be easily reached in a day. Delena natives having disposed of their ware we accompanied them to Delena. It is a small village on the main land opposite Yule Island. Formerly they lived on Yule, but so many having died there, they left it for this. On both sides are extensive mangrove swamps, and at the back a hill 100 feet high with thick bush, yet the people say it is a very healthy place, they having no sickness as on the island. When nearing the village two canoes of Lolo natives came off, but I would not let them come alongside until our friends came up, and we had a talk on the murders of Dr. James and Captain Thorngren. After landing, we had a meeting, and I am assured the Lolo natives did not commit the murders, that it was Paitana natives, a village near Lolo, up one of the creeks, and no great distance from the coast. The story we heard three years ago is substantiated as to the reason of the murders. These people are not altogether free from blame, as they could have prevented the Paitana natives attacking, or have informed Dr. James the day before that an attack was arranged. They speak very well of Dr. James, but of another naturalist and collector who lived on the island they use the strongest expressions of dislike, and hope he may never return. They say he was always threatening, and did fire on more than one occasion on natives. I asked them why he was not murdered, and they said he left before a plot laid was carried out, but had he remained much longer he would have gone. Such men do an amazing amount of harm, and endanger the lives of many. They do not believe in the 'confidence begetting confidence,' even with a revolver on belt and musket or rifle on shoulder. They anxiously inquire for Waunaea and Anederea. There was no occasion for the teacher leaving, as his life was never threatened or even spoken about. They say he and his wife were 'foolishly' afraid. The reason given at the last was 'they were hungry and must go, but would return.' The people are all very friendly, cooking us food. Our boatmen are very much afraid to go on. The people here say we would not be openly attacked, but they advise us to eat no cooked food. A consultation has been held. I have told them to remain. We shall go alone; but they decide to go on with us, and to eat only food cooked by themselves. Kone will accompany us; he is related to Oa's family. Since the disturbance of eastern and western natives, these people are having good times in the crockery market, supplying at their own prices all round. Kone says we may visit all about; but, in the meantime, leave Paitana out. He thinks if they knew we were in the neighbourhood they would have been wishing to make peace. If I make peace with them, and they are afterwards punished, I would not be safe on any part of the coast.

"27th.—Arrived at Maiva this evening in rain. We were met on the beach by a great crowd of natives—men, women, and children, and not a club, spear, or bow. They have been expecting us for some time. Fearing a westerly wind we anchored our boats well out, and landed, walking in to Oa's village. They had not heard of our arrival, so we were near the village before they were aware of it. Paru, Oa's brother, came running out to meet us; he led us right up to Oa's house, and, taking me by the hand, drew me in. The house was very dark. The chief is buried in the centre, a mat was spread over the grave on which I was asked to sit until they had 'a weeping.' His wives, daughters-in-law and weeping women sat round; his son, Meauri, sat at the foot, and several of the male relatives stood beside me. It was unbearable, at times loud, then again low and plaintive, one party would chant a question of something relating to the deceased and the opposite party of women would reply, then all would unite in a great burst. They beat their breasts and tore their hair, swaying themselves right and left, backwards and forwards. I sent for Piri and got him to take my place. Oa spoke of me to them all as a special friend, and shortly before his death wondered why I had not come. He was a fine fellow, somewhat despotic in his own place, a man-of-war from his youth, and a great sorcerer. He had wonderful influence all along the coast, to Port Moresby on the east, and to Orokolo, near Bald Head on the west. His bows and arrows are stuck at the head of the grave, and on these hang some of his ornaments. The greater part of his jewellery is buried with him. The large temple, or dupu, is given to us to live in during our stay, but our followers must not enter. It is, from end to end, 160 feet long and 50 broad. At the entrance is a screen made from the sago-palm leaf, hanging loosely. Overhead, just inside, are six large frames all covered with feathers of various kinds. These are sacred to the spirit, and must never be looked upon by women, young unmarried men, or children. I occupy Oa's place in the dupu. All the posts are named, and each chief has his own particular part. A large front post, with a well-carved alligator, done by Oa shortly before his death with a tomahawk I gave him, is named Tamate. Meauri came in the evening, and called me out to know if I was comfortable, and if there was anything he could do for me. He dare not enter, being in mourning.

"28th.—We had a very large attendance at service this morning, in the centre of the village, the first ever held in this locality. Rua, one of the chiefs, is now sitting alongside; he tells me it would be a fearful thing for any women or youth to see inside the dupu, that should they, they would be smitten with loathsome disease and never recover. Shortly, all the men will gather in this place, and for two months will not see or be seen by females or youths. Enclosed paths are to be made from the dupu to the bush, along which they can go unseen with safety. At stated times food will be brought by their wives, and left outside at some distance, and when no one is about they go out and carry it in. Any one becoming sick during those two months must remain in dupu, and on no account go out to friends. 'Now, Rua, tell me, if one should die what then?' 'No one can die during that time.' 'But suppose one should die, what would you do?' 'Take his body outside, and leave it for his wife or wives and children to carry away, weep over, and bury.' The taboo is very strict, no one will break it. Anyone breaking the taboo would be smitten with leprosy that would 'consume' him. When the two months are up, and the taboo is off, all march to the sea and bathe, return to the dupu and dress in their finest, then out to a grand feast prepared by the outsiders, after which dancing and feasting are carried on for several days and nights. Should a man be pursued by an enemy, and take refuge in the dupu, he is perfectly safe inside. Anyone smiting another inside the dupu would have his arms and legs shrivelled up, and he could nothing but wish to die. Rua has lately been to the port and seen our new church, he says, 'Tamate, your dupu is bad.' 'No Rua, it is small but light, and we invite men, women, and children to enter to hear of God and His love through His son, Jesus Christ. Your house is dark and no women or children must enter.' 'Ah! You see this place is too sacred, and they must never enter.' 'Not so sacred as ours, we never smoke or sleep about in ours as you do here, we worship the one Great Spirit, by all meeting together, and praise Him in song, prayer, reading His word, and hearing of him.' To Rua it was all new. Meauri, Oa's son, is a strapping fellow, about 23 years of age. He has five wives, who are all much attached to him. Meauri and all Oa's friends, with all Maiva, would willingly have teachers. A missionary here, with a staff of teachers, could do valiant things for Christ. To work from here to Bald Head can be easily done, and to do it otherwise than living amongst the people is simply absurd, merely playing at mission work. The heathen must see our daily life, must learn to love us, must hear from our lips the word of Eternal Life, and so be led to love Christ. I hope we mean work now. We have hitherto been very unfortunate in this mission, the teachers alone having been permanent. Ruatoka and Piri have had no change since they came to New Guinea, nearly eight years ago. We (foreign missionaries) have been flying all round the compass. This evening a Paitana chief, extravagantly dressed, came in, but did not give me time to speak of the murders.

"29th. Left before daylight for Keveri, a district inland of Cape Possession. We crossed two deep swamps, and passed through numerous well-kept yam plantations. By the light of a waning moon, women were out weeding, fearing to do so in the sun. There are large groves of cocoanut trees; and in the swamps extensive sago, palm groves, taro, yams, bananas, and sugar-cane are all grown in great abundance. Keveri is as large as Maiva, and the villages all kept as neat and clean. In front of the houses on both sides of the street in each village are cocoanut trees, breadfruit trees, dracaenae of various kinds, and a beautiful assortment of crotons. We had really a splendid reception, and crowds came to see the strangers. Paru, Oa's brother, led the party, and he did his part well. We returned laden with food. Mekeo natives are in from inland with betel nuts. They are terrible smokers. In the evening we had a strong shock of earthquake; sitting on a platform in the village I feared it was going to fall, and I felt a peculiar sensation as of sea sickness. Meauri and his friends say they will do all to live peaceably amongst themselves, and with neighbouring villages. We leave to-morrow, so to-night there are great lamentations in the village, and many are the invitations to return soon. Some of those in the dupu begged to be permitted to sit by the fire all night, to talk and sing, and so keep us awake. I decidedly objected.

"30th.—Received large presents this morning before leaving, and all turned out to see us off. Meauri would have kept us if he could. The one cry is—'Do return soon.' With a fine wind from the north-west, we were not long running over to Yule, and outside to Delena. We found four large canoes in from Boera, which were to have proceeded to Maiva, but the great Yule sorcerer did not get an armshell large enough to satisfy him, so he told them they must not go, as they would all be killed if they went. They have decided to return from here. I have met the sorcerer, a small, mean, wicked-looking fellow. He would rather not have seen me. The people are dreadfully afraid of him. He was wild with passion when I told him in the presence of the people that his trade was one of murder, robbery, and lying, and that he had better give up, and no longer deceive the people. He gets the best of everything—best pig, best food, best tomahawk, best shells. I fully believe if all these men were hanged there would be fewer murders on the coast. They can use poison well, and their influence can bring tribes against one another. He left me, vowing vengeance, and I fully expected to see him in the morning. In the evening I gave presents to chiefs, and arranged to visit Mekeo to-morrow, if it does not rain overmuch to-night.

"December 1.—Mekeo natives came in during the night, and they report inland districts very unsettled, and think it would be unsafe for us to visit them at present, so we have decided to return. Received presents of feathers, pig, and food. Yule natives are over, but the sorcerer keeps out of the way. With a light wind we ran up to the Namoa Creek, where we landed. On passing through the plantations we met our friend Naime, Koloka's uncle, who, with his wife No. 1, came on to the village with us. The only occupant of the village was one old man; Koloka and husband, with men, women, and children, were out planting. Naime's wife at once cooked food—sago and yams—and a youth coming in was despatched to inform the chieftess that we had returned. Soon she and her husband appeared, and, after dinner, insisted that we should accompany them to where the people were working. We went out and found men and women hard at work with the long poles turning over the earth. Close by, in the shade, a dozen women were cooking. They use hammocks here as at Kabati, and a number were fastened to trees about. In these we spent a lazy afternoon. Her Royal Highness lay in a hammock some distance off, attended by a number of women, who received her orders, and delivered them to the cooks. She gave all her orders without any fuss and in a very quiet manner. We are told by the people that when she travels she is carried in a hammock by women. She is certainly obeyed, and seems to have great power. After feasting with the people, we returned in the cool of the evening to the village. Koloka would not hear of our going to the dupu to sleep. She was much interested in hearing from the boatmen of Maka's marriage to one of Ruatoka's girls; all the presents were carefully enumerated. She would like Maka and his wife to live with them here. Her husband, lounging in his hammock and shaking his head, very seriously told us in great confidence that he had to pay an enormous sum for Koloka, viz., 10 armshells, 3 pearlshell's, two strings of dog's teeth, several hundreds of cocoanuts, large quantity of yams, 2 pigs.

"2nd.—Shortly after turning in last night, we were annoyed with mice—mice running over us, mice on each side of us, mice at our feet, mice at our heads, and mice overhead. About midnight we cleared out and stole away to the dupu to have a quiet sleep; but alas! we were seen. First one came and threw himself close by, the Naime and his wife No. 2, came and lighted a fire to keep off enemies, real and spiritual. I told them I would rather they had remained away and let the enemies come. Boe, on wakening up for his midnight smoke, found we were gone, and he, too, must come to disturb. I ordered him away, as he was too talkative. They are greatly astonished at our apparent carelessness, sleeping anywhere, without guards, watch of any kind, or arms. The idea of ordering them all out of the dupu, and being left alone, will not soon be forgotten. After an early breakfast, we came to the coast accompanied by all the people. Koloka and Boe decided to remain, and finish planting; they also wish to be in the village when the Boerans call. Up till now, for many years they have been at enmity with Boera. On our way down, some of our Boera boatmen went in with us, and, being well received, they arranged at Delena to get some of their leading men to call and make peace. We left the Boerans one of our men, who with Kone and the principal men from the canoes, will go in to Namoa, and conclude a peace. Boera gives armshells and pearlshells; Namoa, pigs, food, and betel nuts. With light winds, we crossed Redscar and Caution Bays, reaching Boera at 5.30 p.m. Our two Hula boys are highly delighted with their trip; they say they will go anywhere with us. They have made friends with Oa's relations, and have received presents. What is to become of Maiva?"

Port Moresby, February 8.

THE FISHERIES BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—Upon perusal of the daily papers, I see that the Upper House has put aside, or rather amended, a clause in this bill relating to the cancellation of "Oyster leases granted under the Act of 1868," by adding, "that the leases should be validated until their expiration." Now, as an old fisherman, and one who has taken an interest in our colonial fisheries, I anticipated for some time past, from the commissions appointed to inquire into our fisheries, that a great revolution was about taking place, that our hitherto neglected fisheries were to receive the careful consideration the protection of our legislators. I have, from time to time, read the voluminous evidence taken by the various commissions, I have read the bill at present introduced by the government, and upon a perusal of the same I find that the Government in introducing the bill made a provision in the very clause now amended by the Upper House, that these oyster lessees should be compensated, and properly so, for the cancellation of their unexpired leases. Sir Henry Parkes withdrew this portion of the clause for some unaccountable reason. Far be it from me that I would wish to do these oyster lessees any injustice, for I think no just man can doubt their claim to compensation. I contend that the Government's desire to bring this Act into operation at once will be most beneficial to the interests of the colony. As all those who are conversant with politics are aware, the Legislative Council has no power to award compensation; and I take it that those gentlemen desirous of seeing justice afforded to the lessees, after Sir John Robertson's intimation that the clause could not be altered by awarding compensation, determined that the Government should keep faith with the lessees and validate the leases. The Upper House were jealous of the honour of the colony in acting as they did, as also were the Government in introducing the bill giving these men compensation. That in itself is most commendable, but the public must see that something very serious arises from the clause as amended. I assert that it would be far cheaper to the country to give the lessees compensation, for the following reasons:—Firstly, the amended clause shelves the Act, so far as oysters are concerned, for over two years, in that the lessees have the best oyster-producing rivers in the country under lease for over two years more. An argument has been used by one of the lessees which is utterly fallacious—that the leases should not be cancelled, "because only seven or eight of these rivers are under lease, and that there are about twenty-six rivers closed by the Government: that these should be thrown open to the public. The figures tend to lead away any person ignorant of the oyster-producing rivers; but do not the lessees know that their seven or eight rivers are far more productive than the 26 other rivers put together? The oysters are far more nutritious, and heavy prices can be obtained for them. The oysters, for instance, from the Tuross, which are not seen in Sydney, the beds being under lease to a Melbourne company; those from the deep water beds at the Clyde, deep water George's River, Port Stephens, Cape Hawke, and Camden Haven oysters, are the finest in the colony. There are natural beds and foreshores in Port Stephens alone from which to supply oysters to meet the present demand, that is, if worked under a proper system. This Port Stephens possesses the largest and most extensive oyster-bearing beds and shores in the colony, and I am sure 500 men could find profitable employment upon these beds were they permitted and had sufficient inducement and protection assured them. The rent paid for this fishery is £150 per annum. How different would the revenue be affected by our present Act if the Government obtained possession of these rivers at once. On this one place, assuming there were 500 oyster catchers employed, each man has to pay a license of £10 a year, which would represent in two years, the unexpired term of the leases, £10,000, and they also must pay a royalty of 4s. per bag on all oysters caught. This would mean another three or four thousand pounds, in the two years on the one place only. There are other considerations, such as finding employment for numbers of men. None of the other fisheries are as extensive as Port Stephens; but, in proportion to area, the loss to the revenue is just as great. The public can thus see that Mr. Woodward, one of the lessees, in writing "that they have only seven or eight rivers, and that there are plenty left for the public," has considered his position before so writing. However beneficial to Mr. Woodward, it will not suit the public revenue. No one will suppose or expect that these lessees will lay out any money in improving these rivers for a two years' tenancy. No regulations can compel them to improve their fisheries, and it stands to reason these men will not do so. These leases were granted in error, and it will not improve matters to legalise the leases, although every honour must be awarded to the Legislative Assembly in affording justice to these so-called lessees. The result is that this Fisheries Act Amendment Bill so long wanted stands in jeopardy by the amendment. I would suggest that the Assembly should not accept the amendment but cancel the leases and give these lessees compensation for the injury done to them by taking away the unexpired portion of their lease. The lessees could not object to this course, as compensation to them would be as just to them as validating their leases, and far more profitable to the country. This plan being adopted the bill could pass this session, and these valuable fisheries be restored to the Government and worked beneficially for the whole community.

Yours, &c., PISCATOR.

A FRESH DEPARTURE.

GOUGH TOWN, MERRYLANDS.

THE NEW TEMPERANCE TOWNSHIP.

WATKIN and WATKIN will sell by auction, on the Estate, Merrylands, on SATURDAY, April 16th, at 3 p.m.,

The NEW TOWNSHIP OF GOUGH TOWN, comprising 378 LOTS.

As will be seen from the lithograph, Gough Town has been laid out by Messrs. Dawson and Stephen, surveyors, on a plan which for symmetry has nothing approaching it now in the market.

WIDE ROADS (66 feet) surrounding it
WIDE ROADS (66 feet) intersecting it and
A BEAUTIFUL SQUARE IN THE CENTRE, dedicated for Public Recreation.

The Land also on inspection will be found to be all that could be desired for a township site, and if the Vendors had had their choice of the district they could not have found another block suitable for subdivision superior to that which for the future will be known as GOUGH TOWN.

THE SOIL IS GOOD, as evidenced by the stately timber.

THE LOCATION is good, within a very easy walk from Merrylands Railway Station, about 2 miles from Parramatta, and no very great distance from GRANVILLE.

THE SURROUNDINGS, with the exception of the beautiful improved grounds of A. T. Holroyd, Esq., which adjoins this, to the westward, have yet to be made; but from the extent of the improvements now being made in this part, it must be evident that the future of Gough Town and this district should be a rapidly improving one.

The roads are being cleared.

Lithographs may be had on application at the office, 313, Pitt-street.

Carrying on the liberal principle which induced the vendors to dedicate the recreation reserve, they have decided to distribute amongst the buyers 20 allotments. Of this fuller information in future advertisements.

The title is under Torrens' Act.

The terms are as liberal as could be desired; 2s 6d in the £1 deposit; balance by 14 monthly payments of 1s 3d in the £, without interest.

WATKIN and WATKIN, Auctioneers, 313, Pitt-street.

Please note that the sale has been postponed to the 16th, as, in consequence of the Hawkesbury Races, a special train could not be obtained.

SALE TAKES PLACE, on the Estate, on SATURDAY, APRIL 23, at 3 p.m.

WATKIN and WATKIN, Auctioneers, will sell by auction on the estate, on SATURDAY, 23rd April,

That MAGNIFICENT ESTATE, subdivided into large allotments, all having excellent depths, as per plan, known as Emerald Hills.

The Emerald Hills must be seen to be appreciated.

To invest in the Emerald Hills must prove profitable.

The amount of recent improvements effected in the immediate neighbourhood of this Estate, and those now in progress, must strike the most casual inspector that this locality, from the many advantages which it possesses from its elevated and consequently healthy position, must become more and more important.

Close to the New Public School, to Enfield Church, to the Congregational Church, and Catholic Church, adjacent to the properties and residences of Messrs. Carter, Cummins, Tell, Mahoney, Allen, with improvements, it may be said, all round this Estate, is worthy the attention of local residents, as well as of Sydney buyers.

The Vendors have spent a large amount in preparing this land for occupation, clearing and stumping the new roads, have subdivided it on a liberal plan, and have instructed us to sell it on as liberal terms as could be wished—viz., 10 per cent. deposit, balance by 36 monthly payments, without interest, thus bringing the means of acquiring a Freehold within the reach of any and every one.

As the Government have decided upon the Great Northern Railway Junction being at Homebush, it is impossible for the most sanguine believer in the future of this neighbourhood to say to what value property within easy distance of that station will rise. Parents desirous of investing small sums for their childrens future benefit cannot do better than invest in Emerald Hill.

Trustees having money to invest cannot do better than invest in

EMERALD HILLS.

The purchase of good land in an improving neighbourhood such as Emerald Hills has never proved to be otherwise than profitable, as hundreds from their improved financial position, in consequence of such investments, can testify.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE CAN BE DONE AGAIN.

THE TITLE IS UNDER TORRENS' ACT.

There will be no mortgage expenses.

Special provision will be made before the day of sale to convey parties desirous of inspecting this grand property.

Plans are now ready, and may be had on application at the Auctioneers' Offices, 313, Pitt-street.
